the whole. Hammond.

Favour to none, to all for fault extends,

Off he rejects, but never once offends. Pope

OFF. adv. [from oft, Sax. in the comparative, oftener; superlative, oftend.]

Off, frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that lone thee,

Offers upon her knees than on her feet, Shakespeare

Distress by day the livid.

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities. 1 Timothy.

In journeying often, in perils in the wilderness. 2 Corinthians.

A lily black-brow'd girl, with forehead broad and high.

That often, had bewitch'd the sea gods with her eye. Dryden.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not often talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison.

OFFENTIVES. adv. [often and times.]

From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase time often infirmities. See OFFEN.]

Frequently; many times; often.

Is our faith in the blessed Trinity a matter needless, to be to oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our public prayer? Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Woodward.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of Providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Atterbury.

OFFTENSES. adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.

Offtense nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd. Milton.

Offtense before I hither did resort.

Charm'd with the conversation of a man
Who led a rural life. Dryden.

OFFTENSE. n. f. A sort of moulding in architecture, consisting of a round and a hollow; almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vi-truvius calls cima. Cima reveria, is an ogee with the hollow downwards. Harris.

To OFFGLE. v. a. [ough, an eye, Dutch.] To view with side glances, as in fondness;

or with a design not to be heeded.

From their high seat with a trumpet check,
And ogling all their audience, then they speak. Dryden.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be let to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of planets, they need not be of the pains to comment upon ogling, and clandestine marriages. Addison.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking-glass. Authnot.

OFFGLER. n. f. [oughler, Dutch.] A fly gazer;

one who views with side glances.

Upon the dimple of the neck-piece, the tribe of oglers stared the bar betwix the neck rather than in the face. Addison.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would oggle you the outside of his eye towards the white upward. Authnot.

OFFING. n. f. [from offa, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotch-potch.

It is a general motive of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great ogles, they rather make a stew than provoke appetite. Smollett.

What is there such an oggle, or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any temple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? King Charles.

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are ogles of guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. L'Esperance.

OFFENSES. n. f. [in heraldry.] Cannon balls of a black colour.

OH. interject. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

Take a full accom'd hour, a charming one,

Cry'd, oh! and mount it. Shakespeare.

Oh me! what the horse have got over the river,

what shall we do? Warton.

My eyes confess it,

My every action speaks my heart's fond;
But oh, the medleys on my high attempt Dryden.

Speaks louder yet.

OIL. n. f. [oavel, Saxon; oleum, Latin.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.

Bring pure oil olive beaten for the light. Plautus.

3. The juices of vegetables, whether expressed or drawn by the still, that will not mix with water.

Oil with chemicals called sulphur, is the second of their hypostatical, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, sub-tile substance, which usually rises after the spirit.

The chemists attribute to this principle all diversity of colours. There are two sorts of oil; one, which will swim upon water, as oil of sweet and lavender,

when the chemists call essential; and another kind, which probably is mixt with salts, and will sink in water, as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

OKE

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil of ripe oil. Bogle

A curious and long mard to toils
Of gentle toil, with combs, and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir'd,
So touch'd his curls, his mighty toil was fir'd. Young
To OIL, v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain idle. Beaumont

Amber will attract flava thus oil'd, it will convert the needles of dials, made of steel or brass or iron, although they be much oil'd, for in their needles combining live upon their centre there can be no adhesion. Brown's Fugio Erroris

Swift oils many a spring which flatterly move. Swift

OILSHOP, n. f. [oil and shop.] A shop where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY, adj. [from oil.]

1. Consisting of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.

The cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it is so thick, but because air preys upon water and flame, and fair upon oil. Bacon's Natural History

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, serves for fuel. Dryden

2. Fatty; greasy.

This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's; Go call him forth. Shakespeare

OILYGRAIN, n. f. A plant. Miller

OILY PALM, n. f. A tree.

It grows as high as the mammal of a ship. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which it incrusts; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to be on. Milner

TO OINT, v. a. [oint, Fr.] To anoint; to smear with something unctuous.

They oint their naked limbs with mother'd oil,
Or from the fountains where living sulphurs boil,
They mix a medicine to foment their limbs. Dryden

Minerva was not wanting to the war,
Directing pointed arrows from atas;
And death with poison arm'd. Dryden

OINTMENT, n. f. [from oint.] Unguent; unctuous matter to smear any thing.

These things they call, as having been instituted in re, and of occasion peculiar to the times of old, and as being now superfluous. Hobbes

Who their such virtue spent of old now fast?
More angels to create. Milton's Paradise Lost

A land there is, Hyperborean'd of old,
The land is fruitful, and the men are old,
Now call'd Italia, from the leader's name. Dryden

In days of old there liv'd of mighty name,
A valiant prince, and Thebes was his name. Dryden

OLDFASHIONED, adj. [old and fashion.]

Formed according to obsolete custom.

Some are offended that I turned their tales into modern English, because they look on Chaucer as a dry, old-fashioned wit, not worth reviving. Dryden

He is one of those old-fashioned men of wit and pleasure, that shew his parts by riddles on marriage. Addison

In the second month, on the twenty-seventh day. Genjia.

11. It is put before the object of some passion.

Compassion on the king commands the sleep.

Could tears recall him into wretched life,
Their sorrow hurts themselves; on him is lost. Dryden.

12. In forms of denunciation it is put before the thing threatened.

Hence on thy side, the captive maid is mine,
Whom not for poor or pray'st I will resign. Dryden.

13. Noting imprecation.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.

14. Noting invocation.

On thee, dear wife, in deserts all alone,
He call'd. Droden.

15. Noting the state of a thing fired. This sense seems peculiar, and is perhaps an old corruption of a fire.

—The earth shook to see the heavens on fire,
And not in fear of your indignity. Shakespeare.

The horses burnt as they stood fast in the stables, or by chance breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light fire. Knollys.

His fancy glows in the progress, and becomes on fire like a comet when by its own quality. Pope.

16. Noting supposition or condition.

I can be satisfied on more easy terms. Dryden.

17. Noting distinction or opposition.

The Rhodians, on the other side, mindful of their former honour, valiantly repelled the enemy. Knollys.

18. Before it, by corruption, it stands for of.

Dashing the garment of this peace, abated
The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare.

A thriving gamester has but a poor trade on't, who fills his pockets at the price of his reputation. Locke.

19. Noting the manner of an event.

How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden.

On, the same with upon. See UPON.

ON. adv.

1. Forward; in succession.

As he forbore one act, to he might have forborn another, and after that another, and to on, till he had by degrees weak'ned, and at length mortified and extinguish'd the habit itself. South.

If the tenant fail the landlord, he must fail his creditor, and he his, and so on. Locke.

These smaller particles are again computed of others much smaller, all which together are equal to all the pores or empty spaces between them, and so on perpetually till you come to solid particles,
such as have no pores. Newton.

2. Forward; in progression.

On indeed they went; but oh! not far;

A fatal stop was crid their head-long course. Daniel.

So saying, on he led his radiant files. Milton.

My hatting days fly on with full career. Milton.

Hopping and flying, thus they led him on.

To the flow lake. Dryden.

What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was form'd, push'd on the red'ning fire. Blackmore.

Go to, I did not mean to chide you;

On with your tale. Rowe.

3. In continuance; without ceasing.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,

And th' eternal morrow dawn. Crashaw.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be choy'd. Dryd.

You roam about, and never are at rest;

By new desires, that is, new torments full possess'd:

As in a feverish dream you still drink on,

And wonder why your thirst is never gone. Dryden.

The peasants defy the sun, they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission. Locke.

4. Not off; as, he is neither on nor off;

that is, he is irresolute.

5. Upon the body, as part of dress. His clothes were neither on nor off; they were disordered. See OFF.

A long cloak he had on. Sidney.

Stiff in brocade, and pluch'd in stays,

Her patches, paint, and jewels on;

All day let envy view her face,

And Phillis is but twenty-one. Prior.

A painted vest prince's voltager had on,

Which from a naked Pict his grandfire won. Blackmore.

6. It notes resolution to advance forward;

not backward;

Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead

A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;

And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common sacrifice to honour fall. Denham.

7. It is through almost all its significations opposed to off, and means approach, junction, addition, or preference.

ON. interject. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for to go on.

Therefore on, or stir your sword stark naked;

for me 'till you must. Shakespeare.

Cheerily on, courteous friends,

To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,

By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakespeare.

On then, my mule! and tools and knives expose,
And, since thou can't not make a friend, make foes. Young.

OVER. adv. [from one.]

1. One time.

Trees that bear mast, nor fruitful but once in two years, the candle is, the candle of the year. Thence.

Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
And utter him the north no longer. Shakespeare.

A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees or even ground. Milton.

Once every moon he watch'd, and once at night.

You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.

2. A single time.

Once my daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour, to sustain
My night, and ever be my just demand. Dryden.

3. The same time.

Once more rest and the great Apollo's praise. Pope.

4. At once.

Who has been is, he does not once tell us. Locke.

5. At once.

At once with him they rose.

Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Milton.

6. At once.

At once he fram'd the bread.

And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd. Dryden.

7. At a point of time undivisible.

Night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,
But all at once, at once the whole air,
The thunders roll. Dryden.

Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance appear like points, and is so far as their light is dilated by refraction, may appear from hence, that when the sun passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton.

8. One time, though no more.

Entomus, those ill deeds that fully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewd son. Dryden.

9. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state.

10. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Flatter our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee.

But hence 'tis gone. Addison.

11. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as,
this once, that once.

ONCE. adj. [an, ane, Saxon; een, Dutch;
em, German; en, Greek.]

1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unit.

The man he knew was one that willingly
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.

Pyndarus the poet, and one of the wisest, ac-knowledge'd also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.

Love him by parts in all your numerous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;

Then when you have reduc'd to that degree,
Language all in one, and think that one is he. Dryd.

2. Indefinitely, any; some one.

ONE

We shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days.
I took pains to make them speak, taught them each how.

One of these or other.
It is added by any.

When any one hears the word of the Kingdom, and made it indelible, then, with the word of one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart.

If any one were made a felon in this life, and left it, he would die, without the hope of becoming a felon in the next life.

It is one thing to be added to another.

When a person is added to a body of people,
the body, commanding a new body.

It is one thing to draw outlines true, the textures false, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these good and true.

Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile.

It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay out thoughts in others with advantage and charm.

My legs were clothed together by so many wraps as one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy.

There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other.

Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell.

At one time they keep their patients for warm, at another time to stifle them, and all of sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.

One of two: apposed to the other.

Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other,
whether there hath been any such thing as this.

Both the matter of the bone and marrow, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marrow, first growing hard, the other as being of a more yielding confidence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure.

Not many; the same.

The church is therefore one, though the members may be many; because they all agree in one faith.
There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints, which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession: for it is a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth.

Particularly one.

One day when Phoebe fair,
With all her band was following the chate,
This nymph quite tri'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest.

One day, in turning some uneven ground,
In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,
His mucklock met resistance, and behold,
A casket full, with diamonds studd, and gold.

Some future.

Heav'n waveth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye.

ONE, n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as conformable with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being understood.

1. A single person.

If one by one we wedded all the world,
She who kill'd would be unparallel'd.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be fought and earnestly thirsted for.

ONE

From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each.

If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my lord, whom who's faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best.
When you'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descend to view the nation's humble seat.

2. A single mass or aggregate.

It is one thing only as a heap is one.

3. The first hour.

Till one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget.

4. The same thing.

I answer'd not again.

But that's all one.

To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one, as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding.

5. A person, indefinitely and loose.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in managing human affairs.

6. A person, by way of eminence.

Ferdinand

My father, king of Spain, was reckoned one.

The wisest prince that there had reign'd.

7. A distinct or particular person.

That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another.

No nations are wholly alien and strangers the one to the other.

The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, supposed to have sufficient, if not an equal measure, obeys not, may reasonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper.

One or other sees a little box which was carried away with her, and to discovers her to her friends.

8. Persons united.

As I have made ye one, lords one remain:

So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.

The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinand and Philip, resolving to keep them at one within themselves.

He is not at one with himself what account to give of it.

*10. [On Pon, French. It is used sometimes as a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they five obscurely, men know not how; or die ob-scurely, men mark not when. Afcham.
For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when;
or, it is not known how.] Any person;
any man indefinitely.*

It is not so worthy to be brought to heretical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Eneas, as by one's own choice and working.

One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Erasmus is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages.

For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first.

For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroes's comment.

11. A person of particular character.

Then what you speak

Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;

Of one not e. fly jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme.

With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who to discreetly us'd his own.

Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it.

One who condemn'd divine and human laws.

ONE

Forgive me, if that title I afford
To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord.

12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world; or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun.
This relative mode of speech, whether singular, or plural, is in my ear, not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found there, hence with your little one.

Does the son receive a natural life? The father enjoys a civil one—that's but the matter, the the term.

These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such rumours one as died in human blood.

He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false error being inherent.

The following plain rules and directions, are the best useful because they are plain ones.

There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad reign, who might possibly have been a good had he been invested with an authority limited law.

This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been ascribed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another; the flower beats the trees against one another; that is, one against another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home.

ONE berry, n. f. [aconitum, Latin.] Wolf-bane.

oneirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written oneirocritical and oneirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make.

ONEIROCRITICK, n. f. [ὀνειροκριτικός, Gr.]
An interpreter of dreams.

Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams.

ONENESS, n. f. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the federal hypothesis, is the one eternal un-derivable divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consub-stantiality with the Father when he came down from heaven and was incarnate.

ONERARY, adj. [onerarius, Lat. onerarius, French.] Fitted for carriage or burdens;

The flout

Of battle now began, and rifing found

Of onset. Milton.

Sometimes it gains a point, and profouly it ftruts itfelf beat and beaten off; yet full againe as the onset, attacks the difficulty afreth, punts this reasoning and that argumnt, like fo many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obftinate enclofed batt.

Without in it and provifions it is incapable to feure concepts that are made in the firft onset of an invention. Addifon.

Obferve

The firft impetuous onset of his gueft;

Use every artifice to keep him bedaft. Philips.

2. Something added or fit on by way of ornamental appendage. This fenfe, fays Nicholfon, is ftill retained in Northumberland, where onset means a taft.

And hunts by fits those whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras.

In matters of mere speculation, it is not material to the welfare of government, or thank lives, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no. South.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the shining mischief under ground. Pope.

OPINIATIVE. adj. [from opinion.]

1. Still in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.
It is difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opiniative uncertainties, like the silver in Homer's crown of gold. Glanville.

OPINIATOR. n. f. [opiniator, Fr.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Effect left lord Roberts government; a man of a sour and fiery nature, a great opiniator, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast found his greivous, and forced to end his days in a mere condition, as it is pity but all such political opiniators should. South.

OPINIPTRE. adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn; inflexible.

Let popular opiniatry should arise, we will deliver the chert opinion. Brown.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and fixed colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke.

So much as we early have comprehended of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, makes us not one jot the more knowing.

though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniastrey. Locke.

I can pass by opiniastrey, and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing. Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniastrey in leaving me: but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. n. f. [opinion, French; opinio, Latin.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben Jonson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is obtained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions; but confirms the dictates and sentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Bless be the princes who have fought for pompous names, or wide dominion, Since by their error we are taught, That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no such settled custom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the strength of reason and circumstances joined with it, or as it shows the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here? South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning him, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipotence. Locke.

A story out of Boccaccio sufficiently shows us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the critics. Addison.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

However I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those who are of the opinion with herself. Law.

TO OPINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoics opined the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those of fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death. Broken.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opined. Glance.

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glance.

One would rather chuse a reader, without art, than one ill instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment. Burnet.

OPINIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

OPINIONATIVENESS. n. f. [from opinionative.] Obstinacy.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Samptuous. Dict.

OPITULATION. n. f. [opitulation, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

OPIUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind; brought to us in flat cakes or masses very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid.

It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the East-Indies, produced from the white garden poppy, with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green, and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. The finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey sufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing, and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram, but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and dissipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on drunkenness, cheerfulness, and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtless; they lose their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsook, and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milt.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. f. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A sort of tree. Ainsw.

OPOL'SALAHUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste; brought to us from the East, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

O'PIDAN. n. f. [opidanus, Lat.] A townsman; an inhabitant of a town.

TO OPI'NERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in use.

The duke of Guise Henry was the greatest usurer in France, for that he had turned all his estate into obligations; meaning that he had sold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donations to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanted with France, for the restoring Roussillon and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.

TO O'PILATE. v. a. [opילו, Lat. opiler, Fr.] To heap up obstruction.

The ingredients prescribed in their substance actuate the spirits, reclude opulations, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

O'PILATIVE. adj. [opillative, Fr.] Obstructive.

O'PPL'ED. adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crowded.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid, it was opponent to our search ordain'd, That joy still fought should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. f. [opponens, Latin.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.

2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet: correlative to the defendant or respondent.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long-proctored moderator. Merc.

OPPORTUNE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Lat.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will hit us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neigh'ring arms

And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTU'NELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chuse a war rather than to have Biscagne carried by France, being situate to opportune to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity, whereof I am therefore opportune induced to say somewhat. Watson.

The experiment does opportune supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTU'NITY. n. f. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds. Mens behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight, but free for exercise. Bacon.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.
Accur'd opportunity!

That work'd our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd, Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Thou' their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to see the cloud descend, and after it was past, to ascend again so high as to get over part of the mountain. Broken's Travels.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broom.

TO O'PPOSE. v. a. [opposere, Fr. oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: and my desire
All continent impediments won't o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare's Muchad.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all Saves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.

g. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury. Shakespeare.

I thro' the seas purst'd their exil'd race,
Engag'd the heav'n's oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempests rag'd in vain. Dryden.

4. To place in front; to place over against.

Her grace sat down
In a rich chair of state; opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shakspeare.

To OPPOSE. v. n.

1. To act adversely.
A forsworn, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He practised to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his mischievous drift, and in such sort to encumber and weaken the rest, that they should be no impediments to him. Hayward.

2. To object in a disputation; to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPOSELESS. adj. [from oppose.] Irresistible; not to be opposed.

2. Hostile resistance.

He
Cry'd Oh! and mounted; found no opposition
From what he look'd for should oppose. Shakspeare.

Virtue which breaks thro' opposition,
And all temptation can remove.

Most shines, and most is acceptable above. Milton.
He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe through the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure the laws of God not by their intrinsic goodness, but by the reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.

When the church is taken for the persons making profession of the christian faith, the catholic is often added in opposition to heretics and schismatics. Pearson.

5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, sith otherwise they are but in shew opposite, not in truth. Hooker.

The use of language and custom of speech, in all authors I have met with, has gone upon this rule, or maxim, that exclusive terms are always to be understood in opposition only to what they are opposed to, and not in opposition to what they are not opposed to. Waterland.

6. Inconsistency.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To OPPRESS. v. a. [from oppressus, Latin.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jeremiah.

Alas! a mortal most oppress'd of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakspeare.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppress'd, is plunged in thickest gloom. Thomson.

Yet hath a woman's kindness overrul'd. Shakespeare.

When my oratory grew toward end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God save Richard! Shakespeare.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Than loudest orator. Milton.

By this kind of oratory, and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surpris'd. Charendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he prest with most affectionate tenderness, making tears part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, had the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

Come humble characters, that no one lat,
Come Henry's oratory, Othor's wit. Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antistates, among which there were six armed with rorina, with which the consul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory. Arbutnot.

3. [oratoire, French.]

Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service. Ayliffe.

They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor state of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hosker.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor.

against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some noblemen published a proclamation against those orders and proclamations. Clarendon.

Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disengage them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.

When christians became a distinct body, courts were set up by the order of the apostles themselves, to minister judicial process. Ketticworth.

I have received an order under your hand for a judged among themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.

Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more entirely to religion, he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life. Addison.

When Ouranus first entered into holy orders, he had haughtiness in his temper, a great contempt and disregard for all foolish and unreasonable people; but he has prayed away this spirit. Law.

12. Means to an end.

Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul: for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor.

We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights with temperance. Tillotson.

The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in order to our eternal happiness. Tillotson.

14. In architecture.

A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the Tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entableture, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the column, and one scroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts: the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the Tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two;
the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the Doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the Ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the Corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half,
and the entablature two.

In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten,
and the entablature two.

In a columnnade or range of pillars, the intercolu-miation or space between columns in the Tuscan order, is four diameters. In the Doric order, two and three quarters; in the Ionic order, two and a quarter; in the Corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glavinille.

That being then one plant, which has such an or- ganization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organiza- tion. Locke.

To ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ]. To construct as to that one part co-operates with another; to form or- ganically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature teacheth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what serveth best for their outward form. Hooker.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter or- ganized, could never produce. Ray.

The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life by constantly fleeing particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

ORGANOLOFT. n. f. [organ and loft]. The loft where the organs stand.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.

Nature, which contains its origin, Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakespeare.
If any station upon earth be honourable, their's was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterb.

Some philosophers have placed the original of power in admiration, either of surpassing form, great valour, or superior understanding. Davenant.
Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great oris, Primitive founts, and origines of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.

Compare this translation with the original, the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression. Addison.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.
They, like the seed from which they sprung, accur'd,
Against the gods immortal hatred nur'd;
An iniquous, atrocious, and cruel brood,
Expreſſing their original from blood. Dryden.

ORIGINAL. adj. [originalis, Fr. originalis, Lat.] Primitive; pristine; first.
The original question was, whether God hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image? Stillingfleet.
Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wake.
You fill, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The flock of beauty defin'd for the race;
Kind nature forming them, the pattern took,
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

ORIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause; from the beginning.
A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.

Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton's Agonistes.

ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked; decorated; line.
What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton's Agonistes.

ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked; decorated; line.
What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton's Agonistes.

ORPHA'NOTROPY. n. f. [ὀρφανός, and τρόπος.] An hospital for orphans.

O'RPHIN. n. f. [orpin, Fr. telephon, Lat.] Liver or rose root, anacamptopras, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant. Miller. Cool violets and orpin growing still, Embathed balin and cheerful galingale. Spenser.

O'RREARY. n. f. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Lichfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery: by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.

O'RRIIS. n. f. [oris, Latin.] A plant and flower. Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf; neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.

O'RRIIS. n. f. [old French.] A sort of gold or silver lace.

ORRS. n. f. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ord, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment. In Anglo-Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends, signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort.] Refuse; things left or thrown away. Obsolete.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth; A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds On subject orts and imitations. Shakespeare.

The factions of her teeth, orts of her love, The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques Of her o'er-eaten teeth, are bound to Diomedes. Shakespeare.

Much good do't you then;
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on orts, and safe in your stage-cloths, Dare quit, upon your onths,
The flagers, and the stage-wrights too. Ben Jonson.

ORTHODOX. adj. [ὀρθός and δόξα; orthodox, French.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not used.

Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England, which is as found and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any christian church in the world. Bacon.

An uniform profession of one and the same orthodoxal verity, which was once given to the saints in the holy apostles days. White.

External bliss is not immediately superfructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, If ye know these things, happy are ye if you do them; the doing must be first superfructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens's, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by heretics in some parts of them. Waterland.

ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is orthodoxly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of the religion. Bacon.

Basil himself bears full and clear testimony to Gregory's orthodoxy. Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion; since Providence has made them should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.

ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθός and δρομή.] The art of sailing in the arc of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.

ORTHODROMY. n. f. [ὀρθόδρομος; orthodromic, Fr.] Sailing in a straight course.

ORTHOGON. n. f. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for sharp steeples. Peacham.

ORTHOGONAL. adj. [orthogonal; Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.

ORTHO'GRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.

He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange dishes. Shakspeare.

ORTHOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from orthography.] 1. Rightly spelled.

2. Relating to the spelling. I received from him the following letter, which after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public. Spectator.

3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer.

ORTHOGRAPHICALLY. adj. [from orthographical.] 1. According to the rules of spelling.

2. According to the elevation.

ORTHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω; orthographie, French.] 1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.

This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.

2. The art or practice of spelling. In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs; all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound orthography. Swift.

3. The elevation of a building delineated. You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation with a scale of feet and inches. Mozon.

ORTHO'PNOEA. n. f. [ὀρθόπνοια; orthopnoie, Fr.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in an upright posture.

His disease was an asthma oft turning to an orthopnoea; the cause a transudation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

ORTIVE. adj. [ortive, Fr. ortivus, Latin.] Relating to the rising of any planet or star.

ORTOLAN. n. f. [French.] A small bird accounted very delicious. Nor ortolans nor godwits. Cowley.

ORVAL. n. f. [orvale, Fr. orvala, Lat.] The herb clary. Dict.

ORVIETAN. n. f. [orvietano, Italian; so called from a mountebank at Orvieto in Italy.] An antidote or counter poison; a medicinal composition of electuary, good against poison. Bailey.

OSCHEO'CELE. n. f. [ὀσχεο, and κύε.] A kind of hernia when the intestines break into the scrotum. Dict.

OSCILLATION. n. f. [oscillum, Lat.] The act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum.

OSCILLATORY. adj. [oscillum, Lat.] Moving backward and forward like a pendulum.

The actions upon the solids are stimulating or increasing their vibrations, or oscillatory motions. Arbutnot.

OSCITANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Latin.] 1. The act of yawning.

2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness. If persons of circumspect piety have been overtaken, what security can there be for our wretched oscitancy? Government of the Tongue.

It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who, to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Spectator.

OSCITANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.] 1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.

2. Sleepy; sluggish. Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again. Decay of Piety.

OSCITATION. n. f. [oscito, Lat.] The act of yawning.

I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler.

O'SIER. n. f. [osier, Fr. vite, Lat.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream, Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shakspeare.

Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this osier cage of ours
With busiful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakspeare.

Our comes crown'd with osier, fags, and weeds. Drayton.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay-rick shut. May.
Like her no nymph can willing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend. Dryden.

Along the marshes spread,
We make the osier fringed bank our bed. Pope.

O'SMUND. n. f. A plant: It is sometimes used in medicine. It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.

O'SPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from osifraga, Lat.] The sea eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases. Hamner.

I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the ospray to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. Shakspeare.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, the osifrage, and the ospray. Numbers.

O'SSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's Dict.

O'SSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due motion of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fix to the

Symptoms, bones of skull, the tension of that membrane coming, sound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder.

OSTRICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing caraneous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ostrick faculty, to thrust out callus, and make separation of its caries. Wifemen.

OSTIFICATION. n. f. [from ostify.] Change of caraneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Ostifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisus, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.

OSTIFRAGE. n. f. [ostifraga, Lat. ostifragus, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbidden under the name of gryphon. The ostifraga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins call it avis bustaria. See OSPRAY. Calmet.

TO OSSIFY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.

The dilated artery where in the neighbourhood of the cytt is generally ossified. Sharp.

OSTIVOROUS. adj. [ossa and voro.] Devouring bones.

The bone of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other ostivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Dehman.

OSSUARY. n. f. [ossuarium, Lat.] A charnel-house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Dict.

OST. n. f. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried. Dict.

OSTENSIBLE. adj. [ostendo, Lat.] Such as is proper or intended to be shown.

OSTENSIVE. adj. [ostentif, French; ostendo, Latin.] Showing; betokening.

OSTENT. n. f. [ostentum, Lat.]

1. Appearance; air; manner; mien. Use all the observance of civility, Like one well studied in a sad ostent, To please his grandam. Shakespeare.

2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakespeare.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair ostent of love As shall conveniently become you there. Shaksp.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To stirre our zeales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact so cleane

Of all ill as our sacrifice, so fearful an ostent Should be the issue. Chapman.

Latians, frighted with his dire ostent, For counsel to his father Faunus went; And sought the shades renown'd for prophecy, Which near Albun's sulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.

OSTENTATION. n. f. [ostentation, French; ostentatio, Latin.]

1. Outward show; appearance.

If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volscians?—

—March on my fellows; Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakespeare.

You are come A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented The ostentation of our love. Shakespeare.

ostentation display; boast; vain show. This is the usual sense.

If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Spectator.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your aims before men, to be seen. Atterbury.

With all her lustre, now, her lover warns: Then out of ostentation, hides her charms. Young.

The great end of the art is to strike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no ostentation of the means by which this is done; the spectator is only to feel the result in his bosom. Reynolds.

3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.

The king would have me present the princefs with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antic, or firework. Shakespeare.

OSTENTATIOUS. adj. [ostento, Latin.]

Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyrick, is yet the best. Dryden.

They let fly lies into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Broom.

OSTENTATIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.

OSTENTATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.

OSTENTA'TOUR. n. f. [ostentateur, Fr. ostento, Lat.] A brouster; a vain setter to show.

OSTEOCOLLA. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόλλα; osteo-colla, Fr.] Osteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones. Hill.

Osteocolla is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incruited upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

OSTEOCOPE. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόπε; osteo-copie, Fr.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them.

OSTEOLOGY. n. f. [ὀστέον and λόγος; osteologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.

Richard Farlow, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in osteology, has now laid by that practice. Tutty.

OSTIARY. n. f. [ostium, Lat.] The opening at which a river disembogues itself.

It is received, that the Nilus hath seven ostiaris, that is, by seven channels disburtheneth itself unto the sea. Brown.

OSTLER. n. f. [hostelier, Fr.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.

The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift.

OSTLERY. n. f. [hostelerie, Fr.] The place belonging to the ostler.

OSTRACISM. n. f. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of pulling sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; public censure.

Virtue in courtiers hearts Suffers an ostracism, and departs; Profit, ease, smiles, plenty, bid it go, But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Public envy is an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Boaden.

Ostracism by sending out of doors. The ostracism, and that's out of use. Chapman.

This man, upon a slight and selfish acquisition of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

OSTRACITES. n. f. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state. Hill.

OSTRICH. n. f. [autruche, French; Aruthio, Latin.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakespeare.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich? Job.

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat, Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Cleaveland.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meer larks; in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbuthnot.

OTACOUS'TICK. n. f. [ὠτή and αὐστή; otacoustique, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Crew.

OTHER. pron. [oðer, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different. In this sense it seems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the substantive is suppressed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination; as, of last week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions some are better than other times. Hooder.

Will it not be receiv'd That they have don't?—

—Who dares receive it other? Shakespeare.

The distressed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other time in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Knowles.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of hosts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leaves shall ever be made other than scales for years, not exceeding thirty odd, in collection, and not in reason or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else. In this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king, I should cut off the nobles for their lands; Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shaksp.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the will of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some others are so regular, in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient.

The confession arises, when the one will put their fickle into the other's harvest.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them.

The king had all be crav'd, or could compel, And all was done—let others judge how well.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other.

2. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

Scotland and thou did each in other live, Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can.

6. The next.

Thy air, Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first; A third is like the former.

7. The third part.

Dind my hair up; as 'twas yesterday? No, nor the other day.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent.

OTHERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If I had been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

OTHERGUISE. adv. [other and guise. This is often pronounced and sometimes written othergus.] Of another kind.

OTHERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce, And former sufferings, otherwhere are found.

OTHERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

OTHERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth as necessary for all christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all.

The evidences for such things are not so infallible, but that there is a possibility that the things may be otherwise.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise.

Thy father was a worthy prince, And merited, alas! a better fate; But heaven thought otherwise.

2. By other causes.

Mr John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisbon, and returned with the loss, by sickness and other causes, of eight thousand men.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society.

Men seldom consider God any other way in relation to themselves, and therefore your some extraordinary benefit to excite their attention, and engage their love.

OTTER. n. f. [oten, Sax. intra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is scin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unjustly called putorius aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himself burrows on the water-side, as a bevir; is sometimes tamed, and taught by nimbly surrounding the fishes, to drive them into the net.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay.

Would ye preserve a num'rous sinny race? Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase;

Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores, Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, Lat. an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun, Does on an oval orbit, circling run;

But rarely is the object of our sight, In solar glory sunk.

OVAL. n. f. A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum, Lat.] Consisting of eggs.

Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food.

O'VARY. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Lat.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted.

OVA'TION. n. f. [ovation, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much bloodshed, or defeated some less formidable enemy.

O'UBAT. } n. f. [eruca pilosa, Lat.] A

O'URUST. } sort of caterpillar; an insect.

OUCH. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

Ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk.

O'VEN. n. f. [open, Sax.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard, And from his wide devouring oven sent

A duke of fire, that flashing in his beard, Him all amaz'd.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing.

O'VEN hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situation of them.

If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon oppe, a brink or bank; but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of neith, then over between the Gothick uþar, above. Gilson's Camden.

O'VEN. prep. [uþar, Gothick; oppe, Sax.]

1. Above, with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be! Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest; Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown, You fought our safety, but forgot your own.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority: opposed to under.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people.

3. Above in place: opposed to below.

He was more than over shoes in love. The street should see as the walks over head.

Thrice happy is that humble pair, Beneath the level of all cure,

Over whose heads those arrows fly, Of sad distrust and jealousy.

4. Across; from side to side: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook Bessy to me, She dares not come over to thee.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avennes, poison birds which fly over them.

The geese fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms, Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms.

5. Through; diffusively.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed.

6. Upon.

Wife governors have as great a watch over fumes, as they have of the actions and designs.

Sung heav'nly anthems of his victory, Over temptation and the tempter proud.

7. Before. This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed, And over night what to thereto did need.

8. It is in all senses written by contraction o'er.

O'VEN. adv.

1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you: good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here like with the laws of nature and reason be of necessity; yet somewhat over and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law.

When they did mete it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley-corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small measure yet, or under.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over.

4. From one to another.

This golden vessel the humble deliverer of the Tirhan, who delivereth it over to that son that he had chosen. Bacon.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral. Bacon.

They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Genesis.

7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Solinus, pausing upon the matting, the heat of his story being something over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.

Meditate upon the effects of anger: and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears

To sit and taste, till his meridian heat

Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner is only answerable to God or his viceregent. Taylor.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be beliewed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in comfort gay,
Shall had the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shaksp.
Let them argue over all the topicks of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him,
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shaksp.

Sitting or standing full consist'd to roar,
In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gazing at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,

Nor tempt the dangers of the duty plain;
But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain. Dry.

When children forget, or do inaction awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.

It this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead,
be not sufficient to convince a resolute libertian, neither would the rising of one from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

He cram'd his pockets with the precious store,
And ev'ry night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harris.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.

The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult. Baker.

11. Over and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed, or immediately intended.

Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numbers.

He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherover he came. DeFoe.

12. Over against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Tadmor is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you sit and by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.

I sat his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Spectator.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker. Addison on Italy.

13. To give over: To cease from.

These when they praise, the world believes no more,
Then when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer: as, his physicians have given him over; his friends who advised him, have given him over.

15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth

By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his pow'r: and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste. Shakspere.

St. Hieron reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peachment.

These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind.

Decay of Piety.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part produceth a phlegmon.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unseasonable application of over-cold medicements. Wifeman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare,
They spoil their business with an over-care:

And he who servilely creeps after fame,
Is fate, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'erlooks
His cram'd desires, with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed,
Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,
O'erflow'd before. Dryden.

As they are likely to over-flout their own case, their flattery is hardly to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability;
suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortightedness. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as since others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another of cases and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity: and out of an over-high of that darling invention, rather other arguments. Locke.

A grown person fattening with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach. Had this happened to him by an over-dish of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the empathy counted natural. Locke.

Take care you over-burn not the turf: it is only to be burnt to us many make it break. Motimer.

Don't over-fatigue the spirit, lest the mind be seized with a delirium, and thereby mislead and grow tired of a particular subject. Watts.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea chokes another. An over-ready grasp does not retain the lesson handed. Watts.

To OVERABUNDANT, v. a. [over and abound.]
To abound more than enough.

Both unable Fitting congenial pace, to rich the soil,
So much does tractuous moisture o'er-abound. Phil.

The banner, never over-abounding in transitory aim, should not be discontinued. Pope.

To OVERACT, v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act when you don't understand:
A little call yourself again; and think. Ben Jonson.

Princes courts may over-act then reverence, and make themselves laugh'd at for their too-loudness and extravagant relative worship. Stillington.

Good men often blench the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things, as, by an indifferent seal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Titelm.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

To OVERARCH, v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendant woods. Pope.

To OVERAWE, v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superior influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magnitudes, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, o'er-aw'd
His malice. Milton.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and founding in your ears the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply. Addison's Guardian.

A thousand fears Still over-awe when she appears. Glanville.

To OVERBALANCE, v. a. To weigh down;
to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balance of any factors. King Charles.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money. Locke.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them. Rogers.

OVERBALANCE, n. f. [over and balance.]
Something more than equivalent.

Our expected commodities would, by the manner, enlarge the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, thus a mighty overbalance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the overbalance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief. Locke.

OVERBATTLE, adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; battle is to grow fit, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trull.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds: the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it brings abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, either prevented in place or detoured of nourishment, faileth. Hooker.

To OVERBEAR, v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to overwhelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the law? Hooker.

My desire
All content in my mind would o'er-bear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspere.

The ocean o'er-whelming of his list,
Eat not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Ixion, in a riotous head, O'er-bears your officers. Shakspere.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To o'er-bear. Shakspere.

Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee. Shakspere.

The Turkish commander, with all their forces, assail'd the city, thrusting their men into the treaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-borne the christians. Knolles.

The point of reputation, when it comes to a case of the battle lost, did o'er-bear the reason of war. Bacon.

OVE

Yes, fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulf of smooth water. L'Estrange.

Crowding on this last the first impel,
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell. Dryd.
The judgment, if sway'd by the over-bearing of passion, and stor'd with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous.
Gloucester's Scylla.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over- bearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.
The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty. Addison.

To OVERBID, v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have over-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

To OVERBLOW, v. n. [over and blow.] To be put to violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown. Spenser.
All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-ran all Spain.
Spenser.

This ague fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakespeare.

When storms are over-blown. Dryden.

To OVERBLOW, v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what the way here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's over-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her grace known.
Waller.

OVERBOARD, adv. [over and board.] See
BOARD. Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again, and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over- board, there were hopes a calm should ensue. Herrick.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board.
South.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he seiz'd the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea. L'Estrange.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board. Arbutnot.

To OVERBULK, v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakespeare.

To OVERBURDEN, v. a. [over and burden.]
To load with too great weight.

If he were not loy'd with his company, and that he thought not the earth over-burthen'd with him, he would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVERBUY, v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who fights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.
Dryden.

To OVERCARRY, v. a. [over and carry.]
To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easily to be overcarried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVERCAST, v. a. part. overcast. [over and cast.]

OVE

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they pass,
The day with clouds was sudden over-cast. Spenser.
The, Robin, over-cast the night;

The flurly welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shaksp.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh.

I of fumes, and humid vapours made,
No cloud in to serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-shining mind. Waller.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning fairs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, over- cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it overcaseth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.
Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his incompt of peace and calms, did much overcast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon.

To OVERCHARGE, v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On us we feed in every instant, and on meats
but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature,
maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants.
Pope.

3. To burden.

He whispers to his pillow
The secrets of his over-charged soul. Shakespeare.

4. To rate too high.

Here's Glo'ster, a foe to citizens,
Over-charging your free parties with large fines.
Shakespeare.

5. To fill too full.

Her heart is but over-charg'd; she will recover.
Shakespeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and supply the brain of a man over-charged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Aeneid, in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it. Addison.

6. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As cannons over-charg'd with double cracks. Shakespeare.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns over-charg'd, breaks, misfires, or recoils.
Denham.

To OVERCLOUD, v. a. [over and cloud.]

To cover with clouds,
The silver empress of the night,
Over-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tickell.

To OVERCLOY, v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A feast of Britons and base-lackey peasants,
Whom their over-cloy'd country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction. Shaksp.

OVE

To OVERCOME, v. a. part. Overcame;
part. past. overcome; anciently overcome, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.

They overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Traustonia'd to fish, for their bold arguedry. Spens.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been. Spens.
Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. Peter.

Fire by thicker air overcome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To surmount.

Miranda is a constant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are sometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome.
Lav.

3. To overflow; to surcharge.

Th'unfallow'd glebe
Yearly overcomes the granaries with stores. Philips.

4. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly. Not in use.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakespeare.

To OVERCOME, v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged. Romans.

OVERCOMER, n. s. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

To OVERCOUNT, v. a. [over and count.]

To rate above the true value.
Thou know'st how much
We do over-count thee. Shakespeare.

To OVERCOVER, v. a. [over and cover.]

To cover completely.
Shut me nightly in a charnel house,
Over-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless skulls. Shakespeare.

To OVERCROW, v. g. [over and crow.]

To crow as in triumph.
A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, becometh now to over-crow so high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all our laws. Spenser.

To OVERDO, v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing to over-done is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirror up to nature. Shakespeare.

Nature so intent upon finishing her work, much sterner over-does than under-does. You shall hear of twenty animals with two heads, for one that hath none. Crew.

When the meat is over-done, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you. Slyff.

To OVERDRESS, v. a. [over and dress.]

To adorn lavishly.
In all, let nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To OVERDRIVE, v. a. [over and drive.]

To drive too hard, or beyond strength.
The flocks and herds with young, if men should over-drive one day, all will die. Genius.

To OVEREYE, v. a. [over and eye.]

1. To superintend.

2. To observe; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over-eying of his odd behaviours,
You break into some merry passion. Shakespeare.

To OVEREMPTY, v. a. [over and empty.]

To make too empty.
The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangledness of the manner, if not in consciousness of the matter, which might over-empty their husbands purses. Carew.

OVERFALL, adv. [over and fall.] Catastrophically.

To statute addeth, that those which dwell near those falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like those that dwell near the careful of Nileus. Haligh.

To OVERFLOW, v. n. [over and float.] To swim; to float.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and o'er-flows, With a red deluge, their increasing mounds. Dryden.

To OVERFLOW, v. n. [over and flow.]

1. To be fuller than the brim can hold. While our strong walls secure us from the foe, E'er yet with blood our ditches over-flow. Dryden.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the over-flowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the Author of all we enjoy, but such an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVERFLOW, v. a.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, would'st thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to over-flow all thy hopes? Taylor.

Now milk that all the winter never fails, And all the summer over-flows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to overrun; to overpower.

The Scythians, at such time as the northern nations over-flowed all christendom, came down to the sea-coast. Spenser.

Clamorous over-flow'd th' unhappy coast. Dryden.

Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? And are not the countries to over-flown still situate between the tropics? Bentley.

Sixty seven hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and destroyed in a deluge of water, that over-spread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

Thus oft by mariners are shewn, Earl Godwin's castles over-flown. Swift.

OVERFLOW, n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?—

—In great measure.—

A kind over-flow of kindness. Shakespeare.

Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm. Bacon.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abikuse writings: for that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed for disjointed pieces of discourse, full of warmth and zeal and over-ness of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through. Locke.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a inundation. Arbuthnot.

The expression may be ascribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general disposition of a lyflee. Brome.

OVERFLOWING, n. f. [from, overflow.]

Exuberance; capionfiness.

When men are young, they might vent the over-flowing of their fancy that way. Denham.

When the over-flowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministry of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it. Hagert.

OVERFLOWINGLY, adv. [from, overflowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance.

Not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his inducement that forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he to over-flowing abundance with. Bayle.

To OVERFLOW, v. a. [over and flow.] To cross by night.

A sinking ship Can scarce over-fly them in a day and night. Laden.

OVERFLOWINGNESS, n. f. [over and flowing.] Too great quickness; too great readiness.

To OVERLABOUR, v. a. [over and labour.]

OVE

To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.

Th. without noise will over-see
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come.
Sweaty and over-labour'd home. Dryden.

To OVERLAD. v. a. [over and load.] To overburden.

Thus to throng and over-lade a soul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear

Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may defy

The noblest way how to despair and die? Suckling.

OVERLARGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily. Collier.

OVERLASHINGLY. adv. [over and lash.] With exaggeration. A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too overlashingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extended where the religion of Mahomet is professed. Hicrewood.

To OVERLAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such, And some overlaid the commons too much. Tupper.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being overlaid and oppress, but mercy which saith from being touched with grievous miseries. Hooker.

When any country is overlaid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself and lay the load upon others. Raleigh.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben Jonson.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or overlaid by the corruption of manners. King Charles.

Our sins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.
The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was overlaid. Dryden.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
Like mothers, which their infants over-lay. Milton.
The new-born babes by nurses overlaid. Dryden.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

They quickly stifled and overlaid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds. South.

The gods have made your noble mind for me, And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:

A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire. Dryden.

The stars, no longer, overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot. Dryden.

Seal on the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies, though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and overlaid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered. Addison.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

4. To cloud; to overcast.

Phœbus' golden face it did detain,
As when a cloud his beams did over-lay. Spenser.

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver, and all the pillars were filleted with silver. Exodus.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold. Milton.

6. To join by something laid over.

OVE

Thou art impow'rd
To fortify thus far, and over-look,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss. Milton.
To OVERLEAP. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'er-leap. Shakespeare.

For in my way it lies.
In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men profane
Th' eternal fences over-leap. Dryden.

OVERLEATHER. n. f. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather. Shakespeare.

OVERLIGHT. n. f. [over and light.] Too strong light.

An over-light maketh the eyes dark, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

To OVERLIVE. v. a. [over and live.] To live longer than another; to survive; to outlive.

Mulidorus, who shewed a mind not to over-live Pyrocles, prevailed. Sidney.

He concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may over-live the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite. Shakespeare.

They over-lived that envy, and had their pardons afterwards. Hayward.

To OVERLIVE. v. n. To live too long.

Why do I over-live?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton.

OVERLIVE. n. f. [from overlive.] Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the king's lives, and the over-liver of them. Bacon.

To OVERLOAD. v. a. [over and load.] To burden with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and overlaid, and all they learn is mere jargon. Felton.

Men overlaid with a large estate
May spill their treasure in a nice conceit;
The rich may be o'er-laid, but oh! 'tis sad,
To say you're ruin'd, when we swear you're mad. Young.

OVERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.] To view from a higher place.

The pile o'er-look'd the town, and drew the fight, Surpass'd at once with reverence and delight. Dryden.

I will do it with the same respect to him, as if he were alive, and over-looking my paper while I write. Dryden.

2. To view fully; to peruse.

Wou'd I had o'er-look'd the letter. Shakespeare.

3. To superintend; to oversee.

He was present in person to over-look the magistrates, and to overawe those subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser.

In the greater out-parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to over-look them. Graunt.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To over-look and file, and polish well,
Fright poets from that necessary toil. Rosecommon.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and over-looking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life. Addison.

In vain do we hope that God will over-look such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience. Rogers.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ over-look'd the manner, and demonstrated them solely from the manner of his speech.

OVE

To over-look the entertainment before him, at length for that which lies out of the way, sickly and servile. Collier.

The suffrage of our poet laureate should not be over-looked. Addison.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally overlooks all human greatness that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror. Addison.

The happiest of mankind, over-looking the solid blessings which they already have, set the hearts upon somewhat they want. Atterbury.

They over-look truth in the judgments they pass on adversity and prosperity. The temptations they attend the former they can easily see, and dread at distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter. Atterbury.

OVERLOOKER. n. f. [over and look.] The original word signifies an over-looker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and overlooks them. Watts.

OVERLOOP. n. f. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordinance better than we were wont, because our nether over-loops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea. Raleigh.

OVERMASTED. adj. [over and mast.] Having too much mast.

Cloanthus better mann'd, pursu'd him fast,
But his o'er-masted gally check'd his haste. Dryden.

To OVERMASTER. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us, O'er-master it as you may. Shakespeare.

So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is prest
With many a merciless o'er-mast'ring wave. Crashaw.

They are over-mastered with a score of drunkards, the only soldiery left about them, or else comply with all rapines and violences. Milton.

To OVERMATCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superiour force.

I have seen a swan
With bodiless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shakespeare.

Sir William Lucy, with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid. Shakspeare.

Affix, lest I who erst Thought none my equal, now be over-match'd. Paradise Regain'd.

How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only over-match, but surpass it. Decay of Piety.

He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English over-match'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue. Dryden.

It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
Should over-match the moat, and match the best. Dryden.

OVERMATCH. n. f. [over and match.] One of superiour powers; one not to be overcome.

Spain is no over-match for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.

Ever was his over-match, who self-deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with or his own. Milton.

In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great-Britain, who would not be an over-match for an Irish prince. Addison.

OVERMEASURE. n. f. [over and measure.] Something given over the due measure.

To OVERMIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.

Those things that are o'er-mix'd, no joys shall know. Or little benefit over-mix'd with woe. Creech.

OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Highest; over the full authority. Answorth.

OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Too much; more than enough.

It was the opinion of these summaters, in their over-much greatness, to advance the first authors of any useful discovery among the number of their gods.

An over-much use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and over-much drinking, has other ill effects.

OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.

The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in their things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds.

Perhaps
I also erred, in over-much admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee.

Deject not then so over-much thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides.

OVERMUCH. n. f. More than enough.

By attributing over-much to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys,
Even good men may ascribe over-much to themselves.

OVERMUCHNESS. n. f. [from overmuch.]
Exuberance; superabundance. A word not used nor elegant.

There are words that do as much raise a style,
As others can depress it: superlatives and over-muchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean.

TO OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.]
To name in a series.

Over-name them; and as thou namest them I will describe them.

OVERNIGHT. n. f. [over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition. Night before bedtime.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'er-taken.

Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night.

TO OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.]
To lord by virtue of an office.

This might be the fate of a politician which this is over-offices.

OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.]
Too busy; too importunate.

This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of it.

TO OVERPASS. v. a. [over and pass.]

1. To cross.

I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs over-pass.

When on a sudden Torrimond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er.

What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When these they over-pass, and those they shun?

2. To overlook; to pass with disregard.

The complaint about psalms and hymns might as well be over-pass'd without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth.

I read the satire thou outlivedst first,
And laid aside the rest, and over-pass'd.

And swore, I thought the writer was accurst,
That his first satire had not been his last.

Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east

He lightly view'd, and lightly over-pass'd.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, over-passing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to compare.

If the grace of him which giveth over-pass

come, so that the power of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteous gods.

OVERPASS. part. adj. [from overpass.]
Gone; past.

What can't it then swear by now?
—By time to come—

That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-pass.

TO OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.

Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your fidelity to thus far,

Which I will over-pay, and pay again,
When I have found it.

You have yourself your kindness over-paid,
He ceases to oblige who can upbraid.

With thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heavenly make o'er-pay his pains?

TO OVERPERCH. v. a. [over and perch.]
To fly over.

With love's light wings did I over-perch these walls,

For lofty limits cannot hold love out.

TO OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To overlook; to hover above. Out of use.

The ocean over-peering of his life,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,

Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
Over-hears your officers.

Your arguings with poorly fail,
Do over-peer the petty trafficker,

That cur'dly to them, do thou reverence.

Mountainous error would be too lightly heapt,
For truth to over-peer.

Thus yields the cedar to the ax's hedge,
Whose top branch over-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind.

They are invincible by reason of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to landward.

OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.

Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the over-plus of a great fortune.

TO OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.

What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, I have lost them over-plied,

In liberty's defence.

TO OVERPOISE. v. a. [over and poise.] To outweigh.

Whether cramples who have lost their thighs will float, their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-poised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment.

The tide
O'er-weigh'd by darkness, lets the night prevail;

And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night.

OVERPOISE. n. f. [from the v. b.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third.

After which his judgment was over-poised to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he defended in his fourth by slow degrees.

Some over-poise of sway by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war.

TO OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-powered.

As much light over-powers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light.

Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be surprised nor over-powered.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Cæsar, he broke with him, over-powered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him.

The informants in the mountains the standards of the rule of the water; which they could never have been had they not been standing when it did so rise and over-power the earth.

Intemperance, when such an over-powering impulse not any proportion is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it.

TO OVERPRESS. v. a. [over and press.] To bear upon with irresistible force; to overwhelm; to crush.

Having an excellent horse under him, when he was over-pressed by him, he availed them Sidney.

Michael's own man promontories flung,
And over-press'd whole legions creak with him.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought naturally to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-pressed with many burdensome taxes.

TO OVERPRIZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.

Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection.

OVERRANK. adj. [over and rank.] Too rank.

It produces over-rank bins.

TO OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While vain flows and scenes you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,——

That as a fire the former house o'erthrow, Machines and tempests will destroy the new.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires.

TO OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.] 1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Athos, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds.

Such an hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods over-reached the tops of the highest mountains.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A fugacious man is said to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he should be subject?

I have had my brain in the sun and dried it, that it would matter to prevent so gale over-reach.

Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmost vigour raise, and raise'd unite.

A man who had been matchless bold
In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought,
To save his credit, and for very spite Still will be tempting him who foils him still.

There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to over-reach one another.

Forbidden oppression, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery.

We may no more sue for them than we can tell a lie, or swear an unlawful oath, or over-reach in their cause, or be guilty of any other transgression.

Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable course of action. Addison.

John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly envious a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace, let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never over-reach me. History of John Bull.

To OVERRRACH. v. n. A horse is said to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forward, and strikes his toes against his fore-shoes. Farris's Dict.
OVERREACHER. n. f. [from overreach.] A cheat; a deceiver.

To OVERRR-READ. v. a. [over and read.] To peruse.

The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure. Shaksp.
To OVERRR-RED. v. a. [over and red.] To find out with red.

Prick thy face and over-red thy hair,
Thou lily-liver'd boy. Shakspere.

To OVERRR-RIPEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Why droops my lord, like an over-ripen'd corn, Hanging the head with Ceres' plebeian load? Shakspere.

To OVERRR-ROUGH. v. a. [over and rough.] To roast too much.

I was burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Sneak ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed us with such over-roughed flesh. Shaksp.

To OVERRR-ULE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be superiour in authority.

Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I strive against it. Sidney.

That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in congruity of reason over-rule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be such as will be over-ruled with some one, whom they dare not dispute? Whitgift.
His passion and animosity over-ruled his conscience. Clarendon.

A wise man shall over-rule his fears, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the consolations and plausibles of the ferment. Taylor.

He is acted by a passion which absolutely over-rules him, and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career. South.

His temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; and is where they are obliged by an over-ruled impulse of confidence and duty. L'Estrange.

A man may, by the influence of an over-ruled passion, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad inclination. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over-ruled, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hogwood.

3. To supersede; as, in law, to over-rule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a tarding land, nine farthings a Cornish acre, and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Carew.

To OVERRR-UN. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To harass by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.

Those barbarous nations that over-run the world, possess those dominions, whereof they are now to be called. Spenser.

Till the tears she shed,
Like envious floods o'er-run her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature on the world. Shaksp.

They err, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The nine
Their fainting force to shameful flight compell'd,
And with relentless force o'er-run the field. Dryden.

Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run most of the rest. Addison.

A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift.

2. To outrun; to pass behind.

Pyrocles being come to sixteen, over-run his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Mafidus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

We may outrun
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Shakspere.

Ahmaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cush. 2 Samuel.

Galleus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon a heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth over-runneeth the water. Bacon.

3. To overspread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nahum.

This disposition of the parts of the earth, shews us the foot-steps of some kind of rain which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defac'd the surface of the wall,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.

To flatter selfish men into a hope of life wherein there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion, and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.

Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.

Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodw.

5. To injure by treading down.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.

To OVERRR-UN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.

Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul o'er-runs with fondness towards you. Smith.

Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spens.

To OVERSEE. v. a. [over and see.]

1. To superintend; to overlook.

He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutor's nurture to oversee. Spenser.

She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.

I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way I'll encounter, or surmise. Hudibras

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.

A common received error is never utterly over-thrown, till such time as we go from signs unto causes, and then some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker.

Such overseers, as the overseers of this building, would be so overseen as to make that which is narrower, contain that which is larger. Holyday.

They rather observed what he had done and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarendon.

OVERSEER. n. f. [from oversee.]

1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.

There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure would fall sharp on us. Hooker.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers unto Cononiah. Chronicles.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Wou'd he his household ornaments prepare;
Harass his servants, and as overseer stand,
To keep them working with a threaten'ing wand;
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.

The churchwardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-parishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Grant.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]

1. To turn bottom upward; to throw off the basis; to subvert.

The tempests met,

The sailors master'd, and the ship o'er-set. Dryden.
It is forced through the hatches at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; oversetting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodward.

Would the conspiracy exert itself as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France. Addison.

2. To throw out of regularity.

His action against Catiline ruined the Consul, when it saved the city; for it so twell'd his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSE-T. v. n. To fall off the basis, to turn upside down.

Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the oversetting. Mortimer.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.]

To cover with any thing that casts darkness.

Dark cloudy death o'er-shades his beams of life
And he sees not, nor hears us. Shakspere.

No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er-shade the tree,
In vain the bird shall vex the thriving floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.

Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er-shaded in that sav'rite walk,
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Pope.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]

1. To throw a shadow over any thing.

Weeds choke and over-shadow the corn, and so it down, or stave and deprive it of nourishment. Bacon.

Death,
Let the damps of thy dull breath,
Over-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Crahaue

Darkness must over-shadow all his bounds,
Pisplable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.

2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.

My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I send along; ride forth, and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton.

On her should come
The Holy Ghost, and the power of the Highest O'er-shadow her. Milton.

O'ershoots the valley which beneath him lies,
Forgets the depths between, and travels with his eyes. Harte.

3. To venture too far; to assert too much: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not over-shot themselves; which is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hooker.

In finding fault with the laws, I doubt me, you shall much over-shoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other dislikes of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Whitgift.

O'ERSIGHT. n. f. [from over and sight.]

1. Supertendence.

They gave the money, being told, unto them that had the oversight of the house. 2 Kings.
Feed the flock of God, taking the oversight the cost, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Peter.

2. Mistake; error.

Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his oversight and sincerely condemneth them. Hooker.

They watch their opportunity to take advantage of their adventures oversight. Articulate.

Not to his son, he mark'd this oversight.

And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth o'er-swell, he breaks with hideous fall. Faifay.

O'ERT. adj. [overt, Fr.] Open; public; apparent.

To touch this, is no proof,

Without more certain and more overt test,
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shelley.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise, but those secret and hidden virtues that bring forth to time; certain deliveries of a man's self. Pacou.

My spouse at Hull, was the first overt ally to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. King Charles.

The deflection of their destination may have been projected in the dark, but when all was ripe, their senses proceeded to to many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meanest. Swift.

Whereas human laws can reach no farther than to restrain the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Hedges.

To O'ERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.]

1. To catch any thing by pursuit; to come up to something going before.

We durst not continue longer to near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly o'er-take us before we did come to be partakers with her sins. Hooker.

If I had given you this at over-time,
She might have been o'er-taken, and yet she writes Pursuit would be but vain. Shakespeare.

I shall see

The winged vengeance o'er-take such children. Shakespeare.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will o'er-take, I will divide the spoil. Psalms.

My soul, more earnestly released,
Will outstrip his, as he is down before
A late ballet may o'er-take the powder being more. Donne.

To thy wiles move a speedy pace,

Or death will soon o'er-take thee in the chase. Druden.

How much to tremble for fear vengeance should o'er-take him, before he has made his peace with God? Hedges.

2. To take by surprise.

If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Galatians.

That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakspere.
Thou walkest in peril of thy overthrowing. Hooker.

God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness. Proverbs.
O loss of one in heav'n, to judge of wife
Since Sat in fell, whom folly overthrow. Milton.

OVERTHROW, v. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The state of being turned upside down.
2. Ruin; destruction.

Of those christian oratories, the overthrow and ruin is desired, not by infidels, pagans, or Turks, but by a special refined set of christian believers. Hooker.
They return again into Florida, to the mother and overthrow of their own countrymen. Abbot.
I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow. Dryden.

3. Defeat; discomfiture.
From without came to mine eyes the blow,
Where mine inward thoughts did faintly yield,
Both these confus'd poor reason's overthrow;
Faint in myself, thus have I lost the field. Sidney.
Quiet soul, depart,
For I have seen our enemies overthrow. Shall.
From these divers Scots fear'd more harm by victory than they found among their enemies by their overthrow. Hayward.

4. Degradation.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shaksp.

sideration.

Mac. Though moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the sovereign lordship thereof. Darvis on Ireland.
All the fair overtures, made by men well esteem'd for honest dealing, could not take place. Hayward.
We with open brea'd
Stand ready to receive them, if they like
Our overture, and turn not back perverse. Milton.
Withstand the overtures of ill, and be intent and serious in good. Fell.

The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards accommodation with great importunity. Clarendon.
It is convenient supply offers itself to be seized by force or gained by fraud, human nature persuades us to hearken to the inviting overture. Rogers.
Suppose five hundred men proposing, debating, and voting according to their own little or much reason, abundance of indigested and abortive, many pernicious and foolish overtures would arise. Swift.

To OVERTURN, v. a. [over and turn.]
1. To throw down; to topple down; to subvert; to ruin.

He is wise in heart and mighty in strength—which removeth the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Job.
These will sometimes overturn, and sometimes swallow up towns, and make a general confusion in nature. Burnet.
This he obviates, by saying we see all the ideas in God; which is in answer to this objection, but such an one as overturns his whole hypothesis, and renders it useless, and as unintelligible as any of those he has laid aside. Locke.
But he comes round about again, and overturns
every stone that he had laid. Leigh.
If we will not encourage publick works of benefice, till we are secure that no harm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room left for charity. Atterbury.

A monument of deathless fame,
A woman's hand o'erturns. Rover.
2. To overpower; to conquer.
Pain excessive overturns all patience. Milton.

OVERTURNER, n. f. [from overturn.] Subverter.
I have brought before you a robber of the publick treasure, an overturner of law and justice, and the destruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.
To OVERVALUE, v. a. [over and value.]
To rate at too high a price.

We have just cause to stand in some fear, lest by thus overvaluing their feignings they make the price and estimation of Scripture; otherwise notified, to fall. Hooker.
To overvalue human power is likewise an argument of human weakness. Holyday.

To OVERTURN, v. a. [over and veil.] To conquer by plurality of votes.

OVE

The lords and commons might be content to be overruled by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom. K. Charles.
To OVERWATCH, v. n. [over and watch.]
To subdue with long want of rest.

Morpheus is dispatch'd;
Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,
Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
Disolv'd in sleep, and shrinks within his bed. Dryden.

OVERWATCHED, adj. Tired with too much watching.
While the dog haunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to privacy with sleep his over-watch'd eyes. Sidney.

OVERWEAK, adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.
Paternal persuasions, after mankind began to fo-get the original giver of life, became in all overcast to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Raleigh.

To OVERWEARY, v. a. [over and weary.]
To subdue with fatigue.
Might not Palinurus fall asleep and into the sea,
having been over-wearyed with watching? Dryden.

To OVERWEATHER, v. a. [over and weather.] To batter by violence of weather.
How like a younker or a prodigal,
The skard'd bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embrac'd by the strumpet wind!
How like the prodigal doth she return,
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lam'd, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind. Shakspere.

To OVERWEEN, v. n. [over and ween.]
1. To think too highly; to think with arrogance.

2. To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought; especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hanmer.
Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening ear,
Run back and bite, because he was with-held. Shakspere.

My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so. Shakspere.
Lash hence these overweening rage of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives. Shakspere.

My eye's too quick, my heart o'erween too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them. Shakspere.
Take heed of overweening, and compare
Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
Study the best and highest things that are,
But of thyself an humble thought retain, Darvis
They that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen. Milton.

Satan might have learnt
Lest o'erweening, since he fail'd in Job, Whole constant perseverance overcame
Whate'er his cruel malice could invent. Milton.
No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.

Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.

Men of fair minus and not given up to the overweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it, and, in many cases, one with an amazement knows the arguments, and is astonished at the obtuseness of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason. Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,
And scandal ever gaping wide. Swift.
OVERWEENINGLY, adv. [from overween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.

To OVERWEIGH, v. a. [over and weigh.]
To preponderate.
Sharp and subtle discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are overweighed. Hooker.

My unfold'd name, th' sufferance of my life,
Will to your accusation overweigh,
That you shall sully in your own report. Shaksp.

OVERWEIGHT. n. f. [over and weight.] Preponderance.

Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon.

To OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and whelm.]

1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.

What age is this, where honest men,

Plac'd at the helm,
A sea of foam 'bout south or pen,
Shall overwhelm us? Ben Jonson.

Back do I to these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hoe the overwhelm thy heart. Shaksp.

How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laughed at by fools, when compared with that everlasting shame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ? Hogers.

Blind they reject, though now even now they fall.

Death hastes a man, one hour overwhelms them all. Pope.

2. To overlook gloomily.

Let the brow overwhelm it,
As feebly as of old a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shaksp.

A prophetic late I met,
In tattoo'd weeds with overwhelming brows,
Culling of samples. Shaksp.

OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from over- whelming.] In such a manner as to overwhelm. Inelegant, and not in use.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor impudently betray their souls to ruin for that which they call light and trivial; which is to proceed in respect of the acquittal, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious consequences. Derry of Luty.

OVERWISE. adj. [over and wise.] Wise to affliction.

Make not thyself overwise. Ecclesiasticus.

OVERWORN. part. [over and worn.]

1. Worn out; subdued by toil.

Unhappy I had laid me down to rest. Dryden.

2. Spoiled by time.

The jealous overworn widow and herself,
Are mighty goddesses in this matchy. Shaksp.

OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]

1. Labour'd too much.

Apelles' soul of Protegenes, that he knew not When to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought; too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the painting; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden.

2. Worked all over.

Of God's last structure was the northern side,
overwrought with ornaments of limbarous pride. Pope.

3. It has in Shaksp. a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it is corrupted for overwrought; that is, overreached or cheated.

By some device or other,
The villain is overwrought of all my money;
They say this town is full of cozenage. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

OVERYEARED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.

Among them dwelt
A maid, whose fruit was ripe, not overyeared. Fairfax.

OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.]

Too zealous.

It is not of such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some overzealous say of against the immateriality of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.

OUGHT. n. f. [aphit, that is, a whiz, Sax.] This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.

For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.

He asked him if he law ought. Mark.

To do ought good never will be our talk;
But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton.

Universal Lord! be bounteous still
To give us only good; and if the night
Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.

OUGHT. verb imperfect; in the second person oughtest. [This word the etymologists make the preterit of owe, but it has often a present signification.

1. [preterit of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.

Apprehending the occasion, I will add a contribution to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.

This blood which men by treason fought,
That followed, fir, which to myself I ought. Dryd.

2. To be obliged by duty.

Know how thou oughtest to behave. Timothy.
Speak boldly as ought to speak. Ephraim.
She acts just as she ought.

But never, never reach'd one generous thought. Pope.

Judge ought to remember, that their officers is to interpret the law, and not to make or give law. Bacon.

We ought to profess our dependence upon him, and our obligations to him for the good things we enjoy. We ought to publish to the world or bulk of his goodness with the voice of praise, and tell of all his wondrous works. We ought to comfort his servant and children in their afflictions, and relieve his poor distressed members in their manifold necessities, for he that giveth alms, meriteth praise. Nelson.

3. To be fit; to be necessary.

These things ought not to be. James.
If grammar ought to be taught, it must be to one that can speak the language already. Locke.

4. Applied to persons it has a sense not easily explained. To be fit, or necessary that he should.

Ought not Christ to have suffered? Luke.

5. Ought is both of the present and past tenses, and of all persons except the second singular.

OVERFORM. adj. [or um and forma, Latin.]
Having the shape of an egg.

This notion of the mundane egg, or that the world was overform, hath been the fable and language of all antiquity. Barnet.

OVERPAROUS. adj. [or um and parous, Latin.]
Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.

That fishes and birds should be overparous, is a plain sign of Providence. Mor.

Birds and overparous creatures have eggs every h at rest conceived in them to serve them for many years laying. Roy.

OUNCE. n. f. [once, Fr. men, Latin.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight. In Troy weight, an ounce is twenty pennyweights;
a pennyweight twenty-four grains.

The blood he bathed,
Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
By many an ounce, he drop it for his country. Shaksp.

A sponge dry weigheth one ounce twenty-six grains; the same sponge being wet, weigheth fourteen ounces six drams and three quarters. Bacon.

OUNCE. n. f. [once, French; onza, Spanish.]
A lyax; a panther.

The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them
In hillocks. The ounce.

You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office. Shaksp.

OUR. pron. poss. [une, Sax.]
1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.

You shall Lead our first battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what else remains. Shaksp.

Our wit is given almighty God to know,
Our will is given to love him being known;
But God could not be known to us below,
But by his works which through the sense are shown,
So in our little world this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use on divers objects divers powers,
And so we her effect is diversity'd. Davies.

Our soul is the very flame being it was yesterday,
last year, twenty years ago. Beattie.

2. When the substantive goes before, it is written ours.

Lamond, whose virtue in this instance,
So much commends itself, you shall be ours. Shaksp.

Thou that hast fashion'd twice this soul of ours,
So that the is by double title thine. Davies.

Forget the Greeks. Deuham.
Tavall in, shook by Montezuma's powers,
Has, to resist his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.

The same thing was done by them in suing in their courts, which is now done by us in suing in ours. Kettlewell.

Reading furnishes the mind only with material of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours; it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections; unless we chew them over again, they will not give us strength. Locke.

Their organs are better disposed than ours, for receiving gutted impressions from sensible objects. Atterbury.

OURSELVES. reciprocal pronoun. [the plural of myself.]

1. We; not others; it is added to we by way of emphasis or opposition.

The ourselves might distinctly number in words a great deal farther than we usually do, would we find out but some fit denominations to signify them
by. Locke.

2. Us; not others; in the oblique cases.

Sate in ourselves, while on ourselves we stand,
The sea is ours, and that defends the land. Dryd.

Our confession is not intended to instruct God, who knows our sins much better than ourselves do, but it is to humble ourselves, and therefore we must not think to have confided ought till that be done. Duty of Man.

OURSELF is used in the regal style.

To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper time alone. Shaksp.

We ourself will follow
In the man battle. Shaksp.

4. To confels; not to deny.

Make this truth to evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it.

Others will own their weakness of understanding.
Locke.

It must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves.

O'WNER, n. f. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master, rightful possessor.

A buck
Stays but till her owner's come aboard. Shakespeare
It is not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner.
But thou wilt brave me. Shakespeare

Here flew favour, because it happen'd that the owner hath married the fourth time of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon

They intend advantage of my labours,
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton

These wait the owner's last disposal,
And what's permitted to the slave invade. Dryd.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison

That small mole draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Spectator

Victory hath not made us intolerant, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury

What is this war, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope

The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Comden.
Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf,
Or hole or crevice from the leopard.

As you fly from your old tabernacle slaves. Shaksp.
I saw the river Cithunus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many ears of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addison.

2. A castrated bull.

The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bull's, which is caused by abundance of moisture.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen, and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.

The held is spacious I delight to sow,
With oxen I am glad to draw the plough. Dryden.

Because Eusebius hath yet said nothing, we will,
by way of mulet or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon.

3. Sensation of uneasiness.

As the pains of the touch are greater than the offences of the other senses; so likewise are the pleasures. Bacon.

Pain is perfect misery, the worst
Of evils, and excessive, overturns
All patience. Milton.

He would believe, but yet is still in pain,
Pulses the pulse, and feels the leaping vein. Dryden.

What pain do you think a man must feel, when his confidence lays this folly to his charge? Law.

4. [In the plural.] Labour; work; toil.

Many have taken the pains to go out of Europe to reside as friars in America. Abbot.

One labourer and takereth pains, maketh half,
and is so much the more behind. Ecclusiasticus.

The pains they had taken were very great.

Clarendon.

If philosophy be uncertain, the former will conclude in vain; and the latter may be in danger of pronouncing the same on their pains, who seek it, if after all their labour they must reap the wind, mere opinion and conjecture. Glenville.

She needs no weary steps ascend,
All seems before her feet to bend;

And here, as she was born she lies,
High without taking pains to rise. Waller.

The deaf person must be differently treated, and by pleasant usage wrought upon to take some pains at it, watching your seasons and taking great care, that he may not hate his task, but do it cheerfully.

Holder.

If health be such a blessing, it may be worth the pains to discover the regions where it grows, and the springs that feed it. Temple.

They called him a thousand fools for his pains.

L'Estrange.

Some natures the more pains a man takes to reclaim them, the worse they are. L'Estrange.

Her nimble feet refuse
Their wonted speed, and the took pains to lose. Dryden.

The same with pains we gain, but lose with ease,
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

A reasonable clergyman, if he will be at the pains, can make the most ignorant man comprehend what is his duty, and convince him that he ought to perform it. Swift.

5. Labour; task. The singular is, in this sense, obsolete.

He fast arrived on the grassy plain,
And fairly paced forth with easy pain. Spenser.

'Tone paine in a cottage doth take,
When 't'other trim bowers do make. Tupper.

When of the dew, which th' eye and ear do take,
From flow'rs abroad and bring into the brain,
She doth within both wax and honey make:—
This work is hers, this is her proper pain. Davies.

When a lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows, if he that first took pain
To tame his youth, approach the haughty beast,
He bends to him, but fights away the rest. Waller.

papillos, natives of this island, to fall short of three hundred. Ray.

PAPILLONACEOUS, adj. [from papillo,
Latin.]

The flowers of some plants are called papilla- ceous by botanists, which resemble in some thing of the figure of a butterfly, with its wings displayed, and here the petals, or flower leaves, are always of a diverse figure, they are four in number, but joined together at the extremities, one of these is usually larger than the rest, and is placed in the middle of the flower, and by some called vexillum the plants that have this flower are of the leguminous kind; as peas, vetch, &c.

All leguminous plants are, as the learned say,
papilloneous, or bear butterfly flowers. Marle.

PAPILLARY, adj. [from papilla.] Hav-sic, or remedies easily acquired, who derived medicines from the phryx. Brown.

PARABOL, n. f. [παράβολα; parabole, Fr.]
A similitude; a relation under which four things are figured.

Balaam took on his parabol, and said. Numbers.

In the parabol of the talents, our saviour plainly teacheth us, that men are rewarded according to the improvements they make. Nelson.

What is thy tale me parabol to me?
My body is from all diseases free. Dryden.

PARABOLIC, n. f. [Latin.] A conic section, arising from a cone's being cut by a plane parallel to one of its sides, or parallel to a plane that touches one side of the cone. Hutton.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun, they would not have revolved in concentric circles as they do, but have moved in hyperbolas or parabolas, or in ellipses, very eccentric. Newton.

PARABOLICAL, adj. [parabolique, Fr.]
From parabol.]

1. Expressed by parable or similitude.

Such from the text deny the parabolical exposition of Cyprian. Brown.

The scheme of these words is figurative, as being a parabolical description of God's vouchsafing to the world the invaluable blessing of the gospel, by the similitude of a king. Suif.

2. Having the nature or form of a parabola. [from parabola.]

The pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white, but pith up a hillock, but its convexity, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure. Ray.

The ancient ray will describe, in the reflecting medium, the parabolical curve. Chene.

PARABOLICALLY, adv. [from parabolical.]

1. By way of parable or similitude.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal inference. Brown.

PARABOLOID, n. f. [παράβολοι and ἰδω.]
A paraboliform curve in geometry, whose ordinates are supposed to be in triplicate, subduplicate, &c. ratio of their respective abscissas; there is another species; for if you suppose the parameter, multiplied into the square of the abscissa, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate, then the curve is called a semicubical paraboloid.

Harris.

PARACENTRAL. n. f. [παράκεντρον, παράκεντρον, to pierce; paracentre, Fr.] That operation, whereby any of the centers are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany.

Boiss.

PARACENTRICAL. adj. [παράκεντρον.]

PARACENTRICK. adj. Deviating from centrality.

Since the planets move in the elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal time, without finding out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptick.

Chapman.

1. Show; ostentation.

Milton.

PARADISICAL. adj. [from paradise.]

Suiting paradise; making paradise.

The ancient expects the situation of paradisiacal earth in reference to the sea.

Boiss.

Such a mediocrity of heat would be to far from evaluating the earth to a more happy and paradisiacal state, that it would turn it to a barren wilderness.

Woodward.

The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradisiacal scene, among groves and gardens; but, at this season, we are like our poor first parents, turned out of that agreeable, though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into waterer houses, and live together in cities.

Pope.

PARADOX. n. f. [paradoxe, Fr. παράδοξος.] A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearance; a position in appearance absurd.

A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear if they not to be altogether unreasonable.

Hooker.

You undergo too strict a paradox, Striving to make an ugly deed look fair.

Shakspeare.

'Tis an unnatural paradox in the doctrine of causes, that evil should proceed from goodness.

Holmes.

In their love of God men can never be too affectionate: it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate.

Spratt.

'Tis not impossible for any man in his wits, though never so much addicted to paradoxes, to believe otherwise, but that the whole is greater than the part, that contradictions cannot be both true, that three and three make six; that four is more than three.

Hobbes.

PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]

1. Having the nature of a paradox.

What both been every where opinioned by all men, is more than a paradoxical to dispute. Strange it is, how the confidence of men, that have been active in the infraction of laws, among those in any paradoxical and unlearned imitations, should not be apt to make one speak.

Boiss.

These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes no respect of the world.

Boiss.

PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel.

The parallelism and due proportioned inclination of the axis of the earth. More.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way. Ray.

PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλον and γραμμή; parallelograme, Fr.] In geometry, a right-lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a lozenge of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremities, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts.

PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [parallelopipede, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they composed a parallelopipe. Newton.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cube or parallelopipe figure. Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.

That because they have not a bladder of gall, that those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism, not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to stir it. Brown.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a false paralogism, in founding too much upon the few words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbutnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he can live so, is perhaps below paralogy to us. Brown.

1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole; part taken separately.

Women, Silvius, had they work'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have come near
To fall in love with him. Shakespeare.
I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would a tiny parcels de late,
Whereby parcels the last forsaking hand,
But not distinctly. Shakespeare.

An inventory this importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich fuffs and ornaments of household. Shakespeare.

With what care could such a great man have begg'd
Such a parcel of the crown lands, one a addition of money, another the forfeited estate? Dante.
I have known pensioners given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The same experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbutnot.

3. A quantity or mule.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of those colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels? Newton.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors found at my bestowing. Shakespeare.

5. Any number or quantity; in contempt.

They came to this conclusion, that unless they could, by a parcel of far words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. Elphinstone.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions, making deity only to such a measure perfect? whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my power,
And all the parcels of my fond devotion. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding theme, that mine own servant should parcel the tunc of my dignity by addition of his envy! Shakespeare.

PARCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Ditt.

PARCENARY. n. f. [from parsonier, Fr.]

A holding or occupying of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly,

they are said to hold in parcenaria.

Corwell.

TO PARCH. v. a. [from παραίω, says Junius; from percuquo, says Skinner; neither of them seem satisfied with their conjecture. perhaps from pergustus, burnt, to pergust, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry.

Half thy fiery heart to parch thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall. Shakespeare.

Lid he to often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat.
To conquer France? Shakespeare.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Beg a to parch that temperate clime. Milton.
I'm tropp'd with sorrow, with relief
Of tears, parch'd up and wither'd with my grief.
Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parch'd by the sun's beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry-breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heavens above us
dry. Dryden.

Full fifty years
I have indur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the feverer heats of parching summer. Rome.
The skin grows parch'd and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.

A man distressed with thirst in the parch'd places of the wilderness, searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

TO PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Arick sun,
Than in the pride and fair scorn of his eyes. Shakespeare.
If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thus,
many corns will dry and parch into barley. Newton.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, Fr. pergamenta, Lat.] Skins dressed for the writer.

Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.
Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakespeare.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with witch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we flew,
We parch like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PARCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment.

PARD. } n. f. [pardus, pardalis, Lat.]

PARDALF. } The leopard; in poetry, any of the spotted beasts.

The pardale swift, and the tiger cruel. Spenser.
As tox to lambs, as wolf to hater's calf;

As pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son. Shakespeare.

Ten brace of grey-hounds, snowy fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.

A match for *pard*s in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

TO PARDON. v. a. [pardonner, Fr.]

1. To excuse an offender.

When I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardon'd you. Dryden.

2. To forgive a crime.

I will pardon all their iniquities. Jeremiah.
Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong,
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. To remit a penalty.

That thou may'st see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou wilt it. Shakespeare.

4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or slight apology.

Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother,
Shakespeare.

PARDON. n. f. [pardon, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Forgiveness of an offender.

2. Forgiveness of a crime.

He that pleath great men, shall get pardon for impunity. Ecclesiastes.

A slight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with some pardon
among my friends. Wotton.

That minute in pardon is my judge.
What better can we do than prostitute our Before him reverent and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears Waiting the ground? Milton.

There might you see Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

3. Remission of penalty.

4. Forgiveness received.

A man may be wise as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions: figure in his pardon, but miserable in the ignorance of it, and to pardon all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whether he goes. South.

5. Warrant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare.

PARDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excusable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithstanding by its much more pardonable, by how muchable expenses of doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise, is greater, much less this necessity or difficulty have originally run in from ourselves. Hobbes.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but sitting at the bar, he is in-terferable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we could we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PARDONABLENESS. n. f. [from pardonable.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon.

St. John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law, St. Paul's, the wages of sin is death; put these two together, and this concept of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Hall.

PARDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.]

Venially; excusably.

I may judge when I write more or less pardon-ably. Dryden.

PARDONER. n. f. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.

This is his pardon, purchased by such sin,
For which the pardon himself is sin. Shakespeare.

2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgences, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incited the people of Germany. Corwell.

TO PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, parer les ongles, to dress the horses' hoofs when they are shayed by the farrier: thus we first said, pare your nails; and from this transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities of the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish. If pare be used before the thing diminished, it is followed immediately by its accusative;
if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the passive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle: as, away, off.

The creed of Athanasius, and that stored by glory than which nothing doth found more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as fuperfluous, which we mark in any case pare away, till we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakespeare.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd,
Too late to pare her nails now. Shakespeare.
The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakespeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerical convicts should be burned in the hand. Bacon.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin,
He *pare*s his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.
Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is silly, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be pared away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it force safely be sheathed, till the power of the great trouble of our peace be so far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Atterbury.
'Twere well if she would pare her nails. Pope.

PARAGORICK. adj. [παράγορος.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify, and assuage. Dict.

PARENCHYMA. n. f. [παρῆχυμα.]
A spongy or porous substance: in physick, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. Dict.

PARENCHYMATOUS. } adj. [from paren- PARENCHYMOUS. } chyma.] Relating to the parenchyma; spongy.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant heart's-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the parenchyma- tous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of firmed atoms in the space of a pepper-corn. Gray.

These parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundles of exceedingly small threads. Cheyne.

PARÆSIS. a. f. [παράσις.] Persuasion; exhortation. Dict.

PARÆTICK. [παράεικός.] Hortatory.

PARENT. n. f. [parent, Fr. parens, Lat.]
A father or mother.

All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well ordered commonwealths to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.

His custom was, during the warmer season of the year, to spend an hour before evening-prayer in catechising; whereof the parents and older folk were wont to be present. Iccl.

As a public parent of the state,
My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryd.
In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
Had cunning art and fly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain and native love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

PARENTAGE. n. f. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.

A gentleman of noble parentage.
Of our democrats, youthful and nobly allied. Shaksp.
Though men esteem thee low of parentage,
Thy father is th' eternal king. Milton.

And from himself your parentage may know. Dryd.
We had him not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descend from Benjamin. Atterbury.

VOL. II.

PARENTERAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.

It overthrows the careful counsels and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones, newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown.

These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Berham.

Young ladies, on whom parental caution fits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think that they want to be parents. Clerissa.

PARENTATION. n. f. [from parentis, Lat.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.

PARENTHESIS. n. f. [parenthese, Fr.
παρεσις, and ῥήσις.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which encloses it: being commonly marked thus, ( ).

In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many are armed against me with frowns. King Charles.

In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts; he is seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis, in any author. Brown.

Thou shalt be seen,
Tho' with some short parenthesis between,
High on the throne of wit. Dryden.

Don't fuller every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts.

PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.]
Pertaining to a parenthesis.

PARER. n. f. [from para.] An instrument to cut away the surface.

A hone and a parer, like sole of a boot,
To pare away grass, and to raise up the root. Tusser.

PARERGY. n. f. [παρά and ἔργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.

Scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such parergies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown.

PARGET. n. f. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.

Gold was the parget, and the ceiling bright
Did shine all feely with great plates of gold.
The floor with purple and emerald was drest. Spenser.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget: the finer, spad. Woodward.

To PARGET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.

There are not more acts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our morals; and yet, while we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected. Government of the Tongue.

PARGETER. n. f. [from parget.] A plasterer.

PARHELION. n. f. [παρά and ἥλιος.] A mock sun.

To neglect that supreme preponderancy that shines in God, for those dim representations of it that we do set on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion, instead of adoring the sun. Bosch.

PARIETAL. adj. [from paries, Lat.] Constituting the sides, or walls.

The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp.

PARIETARY. n. f. [parietaire, Fr.] An herb.

PARING. n. f. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

Virginity breeds mates, much like a cheese; and consumes itself to the very paring. Shakespeare.

To his guest tho' no way sparing,
He cut himself the rind and paring. Pope.

In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high,
and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer.

PARIS. n. f. [aconitum.] An herb. Ainsl.

PARISH. n. f. [parochia, low Lat. paro- che, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. acco- larum conventus, acclutatus, sacra vicinia.]

The particular charge of a secular priest.
Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra: conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Council.

Daniel came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish. Sidney.

By the catholic church is meant no more than the common church, into which all such persons as belonged to that parish, in which it was built, were wont to congregate. Pearson.

The tythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
But never t'ld, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

PARISH. adj.
1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend, and religious man. Dryden.

Not parish clerk, who calls the pious to clear.
The tythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
But never t'ld, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

2. Maintained by the parish.

The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment. Ayliffe.

A man after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Arbutnot.

The parish allowance to poor people, is very seldom a comfortable maintenance. Law.

PARISHIONER. n. f. [paroisien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.

I praise the Lord for you, and so may my pa- rishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you.
Shakespeare.

Hail happ Valentine, whose day this is,
All the air is thy devotee;
And all the chirping choirsters
And other birds are the parishioners. Dome.

In the greater out-parishes, many of the pa- rishioners, through neglect, do perish. Grant.

I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison.

PARITOR. n. f. [for apparitor.] A beadle;
a summoner of the courts of civil law.

You shall be summoned by an host of paritors;
you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryd.

PARTY. n. f. [partie, Fr. paritas, Lat.]
Equality; resemblance.

We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shame-fulness of the month, who have upbraid us with the opinion of a certain partial party of sins. Hall.

That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a party of prebys, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable. King Charles.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of immutation; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown.

These accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might tell us with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do. Grant.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses par upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he con-verses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of truth. South.

PARK. n. f. [peapnac, Sax. parc, French.]

A peice of ground enclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant.

Manwood, in his forest-law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren, for a park must be inclosed, and may not be open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands; and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowell.

We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or curies but likewise for diversions and sports. Bacon.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?

A little herd of England's tinctious deer,

Mas'd with a yellow kennel of French ems. Shaksp.

PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper.

Ainsworth.

PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

PARLE. n. f. [from parler, Fr.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,

That every day with parle encounter me,

In thy opinion, which is worthiest love? Shaksp.

Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shak.

The bishop, by a parle is, with a show

Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,

To urge the justice of our cause with words?

I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,

Give me my arms. Rowe.

To PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.]

To treat by word of mouth; to talk;

to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Kneller.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining

the would advise him to proceed. Broom.

PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the sword. Schleg.

Well, by my will, we shall not sit no parley;

A rotten case abides no shuffling. Shakspere.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shaksp.

Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calang.

Parley and bolding intelligence with guilt in the most trivial things, he pronounced as treason to ourselves, as well as unto God. Fall.

No gentle means could he essay'd;

'Twas beyond parley when the piece was laid. Dryd.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;

We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryd.

Yet when some better suited youth

Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,

Reflect one moment on his truth,

Who, dying thus, perishes to love thee. Prior.

PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low

Latin; parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual,

the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowell.

P A R

The king is tied to London,

To call a present court of parliament. Shakspere.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shaksp.

The true use of parliaments is very excellent;

and he often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.

I thought the right way of parliaments the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.

These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial flood for parliament men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.]

Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and coqueit, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PARLOUR. n. f. [parloir, Fr. parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.

2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,

And foun into a goodly parlour brought. Spenser.

It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Root and sides were like a parlour made

A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden

The first, forgive my verse if too diffuse,

Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's use;

The second, better bolted and immur'd,

From wolves his out-door family secur'd. Harte.

PARLOURS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but Junius derives it, I think rightly, from pe- rilous, in which it answers to the Latin

improbus.] Keen; sprightly; wuggish.

Albus durc communicate

To none but to his wife his ears of state;

One must be trilled, and he thought her fit,

A parlous prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.]

Quickness; keenness of temper.

PARMA-CITY. n. f. Corruptedly for sperma ceti. Ainsworth.

PARNEL. n. f. [The diminutive of patro- nella.] A punk; a slut. Obsolete.

Skinner.

PAROCHIAL. adj. [parochialis, from para-

chia, low Lat.] Belonging to a parish.

The married state of parochial pastors hath given them the opportunity of setting a more exact and universal pattern of holy living, to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.

PARODY. n. f. [parodie, Fr. parodia.]

A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken,

and by a slight change adapted to some new purpose.

The imitations of the ancients are added together with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. Pope.

To PARODY. v. a. [parodier, French; from parody.] To copy by way of parody.

P A R

I have translated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you advising me. Pope.

PAROLE. n. f. [parole, Fr.] Word given as an assurance; promise given by a prisoner not to go away.

Love's votaries enthrall each other's soul,

Till both of them live but upon parole. Cleveland.

Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love; because I have a scruple whether you can keep your parole, if you become a prisoner to the ladies. Swift.

PARONOMASIA. n. f. [παρονομασία.] A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or syllable, several things are alluded to. It is called in Latin, agno- minatio. Dict.

PARONYCHIA. n. f. [παρωνυχία; parony- chie, Fr.] A preternatural swelling or fore under the root of the nail in one's finger; a felon; a whitlow. Dict.

PARONYMOUS. adj. [παρωνυμος.] Resembling another word.

Show your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the synonymous and the paronymous or kindred names. Watts.

PARROQUET. n. f. [parroquet, or perroquet,

Fr.] A small species of parrot.

The great, red and blue, are parrots; the middle most, called popinjays; and the lesser, parro- quets: in all above twenty sorts. Greav.

I would not give my parroquet

For all the doves that ever flew. Prior

PAROTID. [parotide, Fr. παροτις, παρὰ and ὄρα.] Salivary: so named because near the ears.

Beasts and birds, having one common use of spittle, are furnished with the parotid glands, which help to supply the mouth with it. Greav.

PAROTIS. n. f. [παροτις] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the saliva of the mouth. * Wiffman.

PARONYASM. n. f. [παρονομασία; paronyma,

Fr.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a disease.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease, in the change of the paronym. Dryden.

Amorous girls, through the fury of an hysterick

paronym, are call into a trance for an hour. Harte.

The greater distance of time there is between the paronyms, the fever is less dangerous, but more obstinate. Arbuthnot.

PARRICIDE. n. f. [parricide, Fr. parricide,

Lat. n.]

1. One who destroys his father.

I told him the revenging gods

'Gainst parricides did all their thunder bend;

Spoke with how manifold and strong a band

The child was bound to th' father. Shakspere

2. One who destroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence, as his country or patron.

3. [parricide, Fr. parricidium, Lat.] The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewise a good law-maker; yet in cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon

Morat was always bloody, now he's bale;

And has so far in usurpation gone,

He will by parricide secure the throne. Dryden

PARRICIDAL. } adj. [from parricide

PARRICIDIOUS. } Lat.] Relating to parricide; committing parricide.

He is now paid in his own way, the parricidal animal, and punishment of murderers is upon his own. Dryden

P A R

PARROT. n. f. [perroquet, Fr.] A party-coloured bird of the species of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice. See PAROQUET.
Some will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakespeare.

Who taught the parrot human notes to try?
'Twas witty want, hence hunger to appease. Dryden.

TO PARRY. v. n. [parier, Fr.] To put by thrusts; to fence.

A man of courage, who cannot fence, and will put all upon one thrust, and not stand parrying, has the odds against a moderate fencer. Locke.

I could
By dint of logic strike thee mute;
With learned skill, now path, now parry,
From Dari to Bocardo vary. Prior.

TO PARSE. v. a. [from pars, Latin.] To resolve a sentence into the elements or parts of speech. It is a word only used in grammar schools.

Let him confound the letter into English, and parse it over perfectly. Apham.

Let scholars reduce the words to their original, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs, and give an account of their formations and changes, their syntax and dependencies, which is called parving. Webb.

PARSIMONIOUS. adj. [from parimony.] Covetous; frugal; sparing. It is sometimes of a good, sometimes of a bad sense.

A prodigal king is nearer a tyrant, than a parsimonious, for store at home draweth not his consultations abroad, but want supplieth itself of what is next. Bacon.

Extraordinary funds for one campaign may spare us the expense of many years, whereas a long parsimonious war will drain us of more men and money. Addison.

Parsimonious are mild rigid wisdom. Bouc.

PARSIMONIOUSLY. adv. [from parimony.] Covetously; frugally; sparingly.

Our ancestors acted parsimoniously, because they only spent their own treasure for the good of their posterity; whereas we squandered away the treasures of our posterity. Swift.

PARSIMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from parimony.] A disposition to spare and save.

PARSIMONY. n. f. [parimony, Latin.] Frugality; covetousness; niggardiness; saving temper.

The ways to enrich are many parimony is one of the best, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality. Bacon.

These people, by their extreme parimony, soon grow into wealth from the smallest beginnings. Swift.

PARSLEY. n. f. [persil, Fr. apium, Latin; persil, Welsh.] An herb.

A wench married in the afternoon, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakespeare.

Green beds of parsley near the river grow. Dryden.

Sempronius dug Titus out of the parsley-bed, as they use to tell children, and thereby became his mother. Locke.

PARSNIP. n. f. [parsinaca, Lat.] A plant. November is drawn in a garnish of changeable green, and bunches of parsnips and turneps in his right hand. Percy.

PARSON. n. f. [Derived either from persona, because the parson omnium personarum in ecclesia sustinet; or from parochianus, the parish priest.]

1. The priest of a parish; one that has a parochial charge or cure of souls.
About was preferred by king James to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield, before he had been parson, vicar, or curate of any parish church. Clarendon.

2. A clergyman.
Sometimes comes the with a tithe pig's tail,
Tackling the parson as he lies asleep;
Then dreams he of another benefice. Shakespeare.

P A R

3. It is applied to the teachers of the presbyterians.

PERSONAGE. n. f. [from parson.] The benefice of a parish; a rectory.

I have given him the parsonage of the parish. Addison.

PART. n. f. [pars, Lat.]

1. Something less than the whole; a portion; a quantity taken from a larger quantity.

Helen's cheek, but not her heart,
Atalanta's better part. Shakespeare.

The people stood at the nether part of the mount. Exodus.

This law wanted not parts of prudent and deep foresight; for it took away occasion to pry into the king's tale. Bacon.

The citizens were for the most part slain or taken. Knollys.

Henry had divided
The person of himself into four parts. Daniel.

These conclude that to happen often, which happeneth but sometimes; that to ever, which happeneth but seldom; and that always, which happeneth for the most part. Brown.

Besides his abilities as a soldier, which were eminent, he had very great parts of breeding, being a very great scholar in the political parts of learning. Clarendon.

When your judgment shall grow stronger, it will be necessary to examine, part by part, those works which have given reputation to the masters. Dryden.

Of heavenly part, and part of earthly blood;
A mortal woman mixing with a god. Dryden.

Our ideas of extension and number, do they not contain a secret relation of the parts? Locke.

2. Member.

He fully possessed the revelation he had received from God; all the parts were formed, in his mind, into one harmonious body. Locke.

3. Particular; distinct species.

Eutopia brings them up to all kinds of labour that are proper for women, as sowing, knitting, spinning, and all other parts of housewifery. Law.

4. Ingredient in a mingled mass.

Many irregular and degenerate parts, by the defective economy of nature, continue complicated with the blood. Blackmore.

5. That which, in division, falls to each.

Go not without thy wife, but let me hear
My part of danger, with an equal share. Dryden.

Had I been won, I had desired your blame;
But sure my part was nothing but the shame. Dryden.

6. Proportional quantity.

It was so strong, that never any fill'd
A cup, where that was but by drops insill'd,
And drank it off; but 'twas before all'd
With twenty parts in water. Chapman.

7. Share; concern.

Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also took part of the same. Hebrews.

Sheba said, we have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. 2 Sam.

The magdalen made a covenant with death, because they are worthy to take part with a High Agamemnon provokes Apollo, whom he was willing to appease afterwards at the cost of a while, who had no part in his fault. Pope.

8. Side; party; interest; faction: to take part, is to act in favour of another.

Michael Cadus,
When I have spoken of you disparagingly,
Hath ta'en your part. Shakespeare.

And that he might on many props repose,
He strengthens his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.

Let not thy divine heart
Forethink me any ill;
Destiny may take thy part,
And may thy fears fulfil. Donne.

Some other pow'r
Might have aspir'd, and me, tho' mean, Drawn to his part. Milton.

On nature's common, far as they can see
Or wing, their range and pasture. Thomson.

3. Human culture; education. Not used.

From the first pastures of our infant age,
To elder cares and man's severer page
We lash the pupil. Dryden.

To PASTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a pasture.

To PASTURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To graze on the ground.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green
Those rare and solitary; those in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds uprising.
Milton.

PA'STY. n. s. [paste, Fr.] A pie of crudi-tated without a dish.

Of the paste a coffin will I rear,
And make two pasties of your funeral heeds.
Shakespeare.

I will confess what I know; if ye punch me like a paste, I can say no more. Shakespeare.

If you'd fright an alderman and mayor,
Within a paste lodge a living hare. King.

A man of sober life,
Not quite a madman, though a paste fill,
And much too wise to walk into a well. Pope.

PAT. adj. [from pas, Dutch, Skinner.] Fit; convenient; exactly suitable either as to time or place. This is a low word, and should not be used but in burlesque writings.

Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. Shakespeare.

Now I might do it pat, now he is praying.
Shakespeare.

They never saw two things so pat,
In all respects, as this and that. Hudibras.

Zuinglius deni'd a text, which he found very pat to his doctrine of the Eucharist. Atterbury.

He was surely put to't at the end of a verse,
Because he could find no word to come pat in.
Swift.

PAT. n. s. [patte, Fr. is a foot, and thence pat may be a blow with the foot.]

1. A light quick blow; a tap.

The lent noise is enough to disturb the operation of his brain; the pat of a shuttle-cock, or the creaking of a jack will do. Collier.

2. A small lump of matter beat into shape with the hand.

To PAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike lightly; to tap.

Children prove, whether they can rob upon the brass with one hand, and pat upon the forehead with another, and straightway they pat with both.
Bacon.

Gay pats my shoulder, and you vanish quite.
Pope.

PA'TACHE. n. s. A small ship. Ainsworth.

PA'TACON. n. s. A Spanish coin worth four shillings and eight pence English.
Ainsworth.

To PATCH. v. n. [putzer, Danish; pezzare, Italian.]

1. To cover with a piece sewed on.

They would think themselves miserable in a patched coat, and yet their minds appear in a pre-bald livery of conie patches and borrowed shreds.
Locke.

2. To decorate the face with small spots of black silk.

In the middle brow, were several ladies who patched both sides of their faces. Spectator.

We begg'd her but to patch her face,
She never hit one proper place. Swift.

3. To mend clumsily; to mend so as that the original strength or beauty is lost.

Any thing mended, is but patch'd. Shakespeare.

P A T

Phyſick can but mend our crazy ſtate,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.
Broken limbs, common prudence ſends us to the ſurgeons to piece and patch up. L'Eſtrange.
4. To make up of threads or different pieces.
Sometimes with up emphatical.
If we ſeek to judge of thoſe times, which the Scriptures ſet us down without error, by the reigns of the Aſyrian princes, we ſhall but patch up the ſtory of adventuſe, and leave it in confuſion. Raleigh.
His glorious and was a patch'd work of fate,
Ill ſorted with a coſt effeminate life. Dryden.
There is a viſible ſymmetry in a human body, aſſigns an intrinſick evidence, that it was not formed ſucceſſively and patched up by piece-meal. Hentley.
Enlarging an author's ſenſe, and building fancies of our own upon his foundation, we may call para-phraſing; but more properly changing, adding, patching, piecing. Filſon.
PATCH. n. ſ. [pazzo, Italian.]
1. A piece ſewed on to cover a hole.
Patches ſet upon a little breach,
Diſſeminate more in hiding of the flaw,
Than did the flaw before it was ſo patch'd. Shakſp.
If the ſhoe be ript, or patches put;
He's wounded! ſee the plaſter on his foot. Dryd.
2. A piece inſerted in moſaick or variegated work.
They ſuffer their minds to appear in a pye-bald livery of coarſe patches and borrowed ſhreds, ſuch as the common opinion of thoſe they converſe with clothe them in. Locke.
3. A ſmall ſpot of black ſilk put on the face.
How! Providence! and yet a Scottiſh crew!
Then madam Nature wears black patches too. Clay.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, ſuch grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud.
Suckling.
They were patched differently, and caſt hoſile glances upon one another, and their patches were placed in different ſituations as party ſignals to diſtinguiſh friends from foes. Addyſon.
This the morning omens ſeem'd to tell;
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell.
Pope.
4. A ſmall particle; a parcel of land.
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That brings in no profit but the name. Shakſp.
5. A paltry fellow. Obſolete.
What a py'd nunny's thou? thou ſcurvy patch!
Shakſpeare.
PATCHER. n. ſ. [from patch.] One that patches; a botcher.
PATCHERY. n. ſ. [from patch.] Botchery;
bungling work; forgery. Not in uſe.
You hear him cogg, ſee him diſſemble,
Know his groſs patchery, love him, and feed him,
Yet remain aſſur'd that he's a made-up-villain.
Shakſpeare.
PATCHWORK. n. ſ. [patch and work.]
Work made by ſewing ſmall pieces of different colours interchangeably together.
When my cloaths were finiſhed, they looked like patch-work, only mine were all of a colour. Swift.
Whoever only reads to tranſcribe ſhining remarks, without entering into the genius and ſpirit of the author, will be apt to be miſled out of the regular way of thinking; and all the product of all this will be found a manifeſt incoherent piece of patchwork. Swift.
Foreign her air, her robe's diſcordant pride
In patchwork ſtatt'ring. Pope.
To patch-work learn'd quotations are ally'd,
Both drive to make our poverty our pride. Young.
PATS. n. ſ. [This is derived by Shinner from ette, Fr.] The head. Now commonly uſed in contempt or ridicule; but anciently in ſerious language.
Senſeleſs man, that himſelf doth hate,
To love another;
Here takes thy lover's token on thy pate. Spenser.
Behold the deſpair,
By cuſtoms and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tuſſer.

P A T

He is a traitor, let him to the tower,
And crop away that ſatelliſh pate of his. Shakſp.
Steal by line and level is an excellent pate of pate.
Shakſpeare.
That thy rival.
That broke that bill breaks the pate of faith,
That daily break vow. Shakſpeare.
Who dares
Say this man is a flatterer? The learned pate Ducks to the golden fool. Shakſpeare.
Thank your gentler fate,
That, for a bruſ'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from thoſe knobs that grow
Much harder on the married brow. Hudibras.
If only ſcorn attends men for aſſerting the church's dignity, many will rather chuſe to neglect their duty, than to get a broken pate in the church's ſervice. South.
If any young novice happens into the neighbourhood of flatterers, preſently they are plying his full purſe and empty pate with addreſſes ſuit-able to his vanity. South.
PATED. adj. [from pate.] Having a pate.
It is uſed only in compoſition: as, longpated or cunning; ſhallow-pated or fool-iſh.
PATFACTION. n. ſ. [patefactio, Latin.]
Act or ſtate of opening. Ainſworth.
PATEN. n. ſ. [patina, Latin.] A plate.
Not in uſe.
The floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold;
There's not the ſmalleſt orb which thou beholdeſt,
But in his motion like an angel ſings. Shakſpeare.
PATENT. adj. [patens, Lat. patent, Fr.]
1. Open to the perusal of all: as, letters patent.
In Ireland, where the king diſpoſes of biſhopricks merely by his letters patent, without any Congé d'Elire, which is ſtill kept up in England; though to no other purpoſe, than to ſhew the ancient right of the church to elect her own biſhops. Lefley.
2. Appropriated by letters patent.
Madder is eſteemed a commodity that will turn to good profit; ſo that, in king Charles the firſt's time, it was made a patent commodity. Mortimer.
PATENT. n. ſ. A writ conſerring ſome exclusive right or privilege.
If you are ſo fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; if it touch not you, it comes near no body. Shakſpeare.
So will I grow, ſo live, ſo die,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordſhip. Shakſpeare.
We are cenſured as obſtinate, in not complying with a royal patent. Swift.
PATENTEE. n. ſ. [from patent.] One who has a patent.
If his tenant and patentee diſpoſe of his gift, without his kingly conſent, the lands ſhall revert to the king. Bacon.
In the patent granted to lord Dartmouth, the ſecurities obliged the patentee to receive his money back upon every demand. Swift.
PATER-NOSTER. n. ſ. [Latin.] The Lord's prayer.
PATERNAL. adj. [paternus, Lat. paternel, Fr.]
1. Fatherly; having the relation of a father; pertaining to a father.
I diſclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a ſtranger to my heart and me
Hold thee. Shakſpeare.
Grace ſignifies the paternal favour of God to his elect children. Hammond.
Admonitions fraternal or paternal of his fellow chriſtians or governors of the church. Hammond.
They ſpend their days in joy unblam'd; and dwell
Long time in peace, by families and tribes,
Under paternal rule. Milton.
2. Hereditary; received in ſucceſſion from one's father.
Men plough with oſen of their own
Their ſmall paternal fold of cure. Dryden.

P A T

He held his paternal eſtate from the bounty of the ſubſequator. Dryden.
Retreat betimes
To thy paternal ſeat, the Sabine field,
Where the great Cato toil'd with his own hands.
Addyſon.
PATER-NITY. n. ſ. [from paternus, Latin;
paternité, French.] Fatherſhip; the relation of a father.
The world, while it had ſcarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and elderſhip. Raleigh.
A young heir, kept ſhort by his father, might be known by his countenance; in this caſe, the paternity and filiation leave very tenſible impreſſions.
Arbuthnot
This origination in the divine paternity, as biſhop Pearſon ſpeaks, hath antiently been looked upon as the aſſertion of the unity. Waterland.
PATH. n. ſ. [paθ, Saxon.] Way; road; track. In converſation it is uſed of a narrow way to be pulled on foot; but in ſolemn language means any paſſage.
For darkneſs, where is the place thereof, that thou ſhouldeſt know the paths to the houſe thereof.
Job.
On the glad earth the golden age renew,
And thy great father's path to heav'n purſue. Dryd.
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread. Dryd.
There is but one road by which to climb up, and they have a very ſevere law againſt any that enters the town by another path, leſt any new one ſhould be worn on the mountain. Addyſon.
PATHE-TICAL. } adj. [παθητικός; pathe- PATHE-TICK. } tique, Fr.] Affecting the paſſions; paſſionate; moving.
His page that handſel of wit;
'Tis moſt pathetical. Shakſpeare.
How pathetick is that expoſtulation of Job, when,
for the trial of his patience, he was made to look upon himſelf in this deplorable condition. Speſator.
Tully conſidered the diſpoſitions of a ſincere and leſs mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetick part. Swift.
While thus pathetick to the prince he ſpoke,
From the brave youth the ſtreaming paſſion broke.
Pope.
PATHE-TICALLY. adv. [from pathetical.]
In ſuch a manner as may ſtrike the paſſions.
Theſe reaſons, ſo pathetically urged and ſo admirably ſuited by the proſopopoeia of nature, ſpeaking to her children with ſo much authority, deterre the pains I have taken. Dryden.
PATHE-TICALNESS. n. ſ. [from pathetical.] Quality of being pathetick; quality of moving the paſſions.
PATHLESS. adj. [from path.] Untrodden;
not marked with paths.
Alk thou the citizens of pathleſs woods;
What cut the air with wings, what ſwim in floods?
Sandy.
Like one that hath been led aſtray,
Through the heav'n's wide pathleſs way. Milton.
In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
And wander after pathleſs deſtiny,
Whole dark reſorts ſince prudence cannot know,
In vain it would provide. Dryden.
Through miſis obſcure the wings her tedious way,
Now wanders dazzled with too bright a day;
And from the ſummit of a pathleſs coal
ſees infinite, and in that light is loſt. Prior.
PATHOGNOMONICK. adj. [παθονομονικός, πάθος and νόμος.] Such ſigns of a diſeaſe as are inſeparable, deſigning the eſſence or real nature of the diſeaſe; not ſymptomatiſm. Quincy.
He has the true pathognomonick ſign of love, jealouſy; for no body will ſuffer his miſtreſs to be treated ſo. Arbuthnot.
PATHOLOGICAL. adj. [pathologique, Fr.
from pathology.] Relating to the tokens or diſcoverable effects of a diſtemper.
PATHOLOGIST. n. ſ. [πάθος and λόγος.]
One who treats of pathology.

PATHOLOGY. n. f. [pathos, and logos; pathologic, Fr.] That part of medicine which relates to the disorders, with their differences, causes, and effects, incident to the human body. Quincy.

PATHWAY. n. f. [path and way.] A road; in common acceptance, a narrow way to be passed on foot.

Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shaksp.
In the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death. Proverbs.

When in the middle pathway basks the snake;
O lead me, guard me from the sultry hours. Guy.
PATIBLE. adj. [from patior, Lat.] Sufferable; tolerable. Dict.

PATIBULARY. adj. [patibulaire, Fr. from patibulum, Lat.] Belonging to the gallows. Dict.

PATIENCE. n. f. [patience, Fr. patientia, Lat.]

1. The power of suffering; calm endurance of pain or labour.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shaksp.

Christian fortitude and patience have their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Spratt.
Frequent debauch to habitude prevails,
Patience of toil and love of virtue fails. Prior.

2. The quality of expecting long without rage or discontent; long suffering.
Necessary patience in seeking the Lord, is better than he that leadeth his life without a guide. Ecclesi.
Have patience with me and I will pay thee all. Matthew.

3. Perseverance; continuance of labour.
He learnt with patience, and with meekness taught;
His life was but the comment of his thought. Harte.

4. The quality of bearing offences without revenge or anger.
The hermit then assum'd a bolder tone,
His rage was kindled, and his patience gone. Harte.

5. Sufferance; permission.
By their patience, be it spoken, the apostles preached as well when they wrote, as when they spake the gospel. Hooker.

6. An herb. A species of dock.
Patience, an herb, makes a good boiled salad. Motimer.

PATIENT. adj. [patient, Fr. patiens, Lat.]

1. Having the quality of enduring: with of before the thing endured.
To this outward structure was joined strength of constitution, patient of severest toil and hardship. Fell.

Wheat, which is the best sort of grain, of which the purest bread is made, is patient of heat and cold. Ray.

2. Calm under pain or affliction.
Be patient, and I will stay. Shaksp.
Grieved, but unmov'd, and patient of your scorn,
I die. Dryden.

3. Not revengeful against injuries.
Warn them that are unruly, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thessalonians.

4. Not easily provoked.
Persevering; calmly diligent.
Whatever I have done is due to patient thought. Newton.

5. Persevering; calmly diligent.

6. Not hasty; not vitiously; eager or impetuous.

Too instructions to be great,
Not patient to expect the turns of fate,
They open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.

PATIENT. n. f. [patient, French.]

1. That which receives impressions from external agents.

Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient. Government of the Tongue.

To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagu'd bands disagreeing things. Croech.

Action and passion are modes which belong to substances: when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts.

2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.

You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilent fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.

Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonableness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.

A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.

3. It is sometimes, but rarely, used absolutely for a sick person.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies and beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found
On the hard mattress, or the mother ground. Dryd.

It is wonderful to observe, how inapprehensive these patients are of their disease, and backward to believe their case is dangerous. Blackmore.

TO PATIENT. v. a. [patienter, Fr.] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.

Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Shaksp.
PATIENTLY. adv. [from patient.]

1. Without rage under pain or affliction.
Lament not, Eve, but patiently resign
What justly thou hast lost. Milton.

Ned is in the gout,
Lies rack'd with pain, and you without,
How patiently you hear him groan!
How glad the case is not your own! Swift.

2. Without vitious impetuosity; with calm diligence.

That which they grant, we gladly accept at their hands, and with that patiently they would examine how little cause they have to deny that which as yet they grant not. Hooker.

Could men but once be persuaded patiently to attend to the dictates of their own minds, religion would gain more proteolytes. Calamy.

PATLY. adv. [from pat.] Commodiously; fitly.

PATRIARCH. n. f. [patriarche, French; patriarcha, Latin.]

1. One who governs by paternal right; the father and ruler of a family.

So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve Persisted, yet submissive. Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryd.

2. A bishop superiour to archbishops.

The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Role.

Where secular primates were heretofore given, the ecclesiastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe.

PATRIARCHAL. adj. [patriarchal, French; from patriarch.]

1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.

Such drowsy sedentary souls have they,
Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clay,
And know no climate but their own. Norris.

Nursed enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he against right enlarg'd his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.

2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.

Archbishops or metropolitans in France are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.

PATRIARCHATE. } n. f. [patriarchat, Fr.
PATRIARCHSHIP. } from patriarch.] A bishoprick superiour to archbishopricks.

Between ecclesiastical, the questions are as ancient as the differences between Rome and any other of the old patriarchate. Selden.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship and archbishoprick. Ayliffe.

PATRIARCHY. n. f. Jurisdiction of a patriarch; patriarchate.

Culabria pertained to the patriarch of Constantinople, as appeareth in the novel of Leo Sophus, touching the precedence of metropolitans belonging to that patriarchy. Brewster.

PATRICIAN. adj. [patricien, Fr. patricius, Lat.] Senatorial; noble; not plebeian.

I see
Th' insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field,
His horse's hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addison.

PATRICIAN. n. f. A nobleman.
Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms. Shaksp.

You'll find Græchus, from patrician grown
A fencer and the scandal of the town. Dryden.

Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.

PATRIMONIAL. adj. [patrimonial, French; from patrimony.] Possessed by inheritance.

The expense of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.

Their patrimonial cloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.

PATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from patrimonial.] By inheritance.

Good princes have not only made a distinction between what was their own patrimonially, as the civil law books term it, and what the state had an interest in. Doddman.

PATRIMONY. n. f. [patrimonium, Lat. patrimoine, Fr.] An estate possessed by inheritance.

Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimony of the kingdom. Bacon.

So might the heir, whose father hath in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one great a day,
Hope to restore the patrimony spent. Davies.

In me all Posterity stands cur'd! their patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons,
For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton.

Their ships like wasted patrimonies flew;
Where the thin scatt'ring trees admit the light,
And flum each other's shadows as they grow. Dryd.

The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.

PATRIOT. n. f.

1. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.

Patriots who for sacred freedom stood. Ticket.
The true patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison.

Hero tears shall flow from a more generous cause.
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.

2. It is sometimes used for a factious disturber of the government.

PATRIOTISM. n. f. [from patriot.] Love of one's country; zeal for one's country.

TO PATROCINATE. v. a. [patrocinor, Lat. patrocinor; old Fr.] To patronise; to protect; to defend. Dict.

PATRO'L. n. f. [patrouille, patouille, old French.]

1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept.
2. Those that go the rounds.

O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson.

To PATRO'L. v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.

These outwards of the mind are sent abroad,
And still patrolling beat the neighb'ring road;
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Black.

PATRON. n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Lat.]

1. One who countenances, supports, or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.

I'll plead for you, as for my patron. Shakespeare
Ne'er let me put in flattery Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior

2. A guardian saint.

Thou amongst those faints, whom thou do't see,
Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Speiser

St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.

3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.

We are no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker.

Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke

4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.

Far more the patrons than the clerk's inflame,
Patrons of sense afraid, but not of vice,
Of truth with pride, or sunk in aversion. Wesley.

PATRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]

1. Support; protection.

Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune, the only rebellious hand-maid against virtue? Sidney

Here's patronage, and here our heart desires,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the cloister's ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain,
And how too often we may court in vain. Creech.

2. Guardianship of saints.

From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison

3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.

To PATRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To patronise; to protect. A bad word.
Durst thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?—

—Yes, Sir, as well as you dare patronage
The cautious barking of your flimsy tongue. Shaksp.

An out-law in a castle keeps,
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakespeare.

PATRONAL. adj. [from patronus, Lat.]

Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.

The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown.

PATRONESS. n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Lat.]

1. A female that defends, countenances, or supports.

Of choice escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than earth, her sable mantle spread,
Worn with two truly maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Fairfax.

All things should be guided by her direction, as the sovereign patroness, the protectress of the enterprise. Bacon

Beside me night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.
He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that Providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.

It was taken into the protection of my patronesses at court. Swift.

2. A female guardian saint.

3. A woman that has the gift of a benefice.

To PATRONISE. v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.

Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their works sake, and protected from scorn; but it a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronised nor winked at. Bacon.

All tenderness of confidence against good laws, is hypocrisy, and patronised by none but men of design, who look upon it as the swiftest engine to get into power. South.

I have been esteemed and patronised by the grandfather, the father, and the son. Dryden.

PATRONYMICK. n. f. [πατρωνυμικός, patro-nymique, Fr.] Name expelling the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydides, the son of Tydeus.

It ought to be rendered the son, Tectonides being a patronymick. Browne.

PATREN of a pillar. n. f. Its base. Ainsl.

PATREN. n. f. [patin, Fr.] A shoe of wood with an iron ring, worn under the common shoe by women, to keep them from the dirt.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards, which they call cruckowes, which were fastened to the knees with chains of gold and silver. Cumden.

Good housewives
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gow.

PATTENMAKER. n. f. [patten and maker.]

He that makes pattens.

To PATTER. v. n. [from patte, Fr. the foot.] To make a noise like the quick steps of many feet.

Patt'ring hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in louden'd rain. Dryden.
The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard
By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomf.

PATTERNS. n. f. [patron, French; patroon, Dutch.]

1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.

As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be pattern us for us to follow, and even glories wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.

I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing. Shakespeare.

A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakespeare.

The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Clarendon.

Loft not the honour you have early won,
But stand the pattern of a son. Dryden.
Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind;
not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power. Greiv.

Patterns to rule by are to be sought for out of good, not loose reigns.

This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Davenant.

Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Atterbury.

Take pattern by our sister star,
Delude at once and bless our sight;
When you are from, be seen from far,
And cheeky chide to shine by night. Swift.

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.

A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of silk, &c. he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.

3. An instance; an example.

What God did command touching Canaan, the same concerneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker.

4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.

To PATTERNE. v. a. [patronner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To make in imitation of something; to copy.

As, such a place there is, where we did hunt,
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes. Shaksp.

2. To serve as an example to be followed. Neither sense is now much in use.

When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Shakespeare.

PA'VAN. } n. f. A kind of light tripping
PA'VIN. } dance. Ainsworth.

PAUCILOQUY. n. f. [pauciloquium, Lat.]
Sparing and rare speech. Dix.

PAUCITY. [paucitas, from paucus, Lat.]

1. Fewness; smallness of number.

The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hooker.

In such slender corpufcles as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpufcles. Boyle.

Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.

2. Smallness of quantity.

This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals, as lizards, frogs, and other fishes. Brown.

To PAVE. v. a. [pavio, Lat. paver, Fr.]

1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.

Should she kneel down,
Her brother's shaft has paved bed would break,
And take her hence in honour. Shakespeare.

Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.

From this chymic flame
I see a city of more precious mould,
With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold. Dryden.
The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.

2. To make a passage easy.

It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bacon.

PA'VEMENT. n. f. [pavimentum, Latin.]

Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor. Floor is used of stone, but pavement never of wood.

The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd
Into his radiant roof. Shakespeare.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars seen in the galaxy. Milton.

The long laborious pavement here he treads,
That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.

The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed: for there can be no very durable pavement, but a double one. Arbuthnot.

PA'VEY. } n. f. [from pave.] One who PA'VEY. } lays with stones.

For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,
While every stroke his lab'ring lungs resound. Gay.

PAVILLION. n. f. [pavillon, Fr.] A tent;
a temporary or moveable house.

Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavilion, and the flowers to the trees a mofical floor. Sidney.

She did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue. Shakespeare.

PAU

He, only he, heav'n's blew pavilion spreads,
And on the ocean's dancing billows spreads.
It was usual for the enemy, when they were a king in the field, to demand in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.

The glowing fury springs,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds. Pope.

To PAVILION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with tents.

Jacob in Mahanaim saw
The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright. Milton.

2. To be sheltered by a tent.

With his batt'ning flocks the careful swain
Abides pavilion'd on the grassy plain.

PAUNCH. n. f. [pançe, Fr. pança, Span.

pantex, Lat.] The belly; the region of the guts.

Demades, the orator, was talkative, and would eat hard; Antipater would say of him, that he was like a sacrifice, that nothing was left of it but the tongue and the paunch. Bacon.

Pleading Matho born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden.

To PAUNCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce or rip the belly; to eviscerate;
to take out the paunch; to eviscerate.

With a log
Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake. Shak.

One pass had paunch'd the huge by dropick knight. Garth.

PAUPER. n. f. [Lat.] A poor person; one who receives alms.

PAUSE. n. f. [pauze, Fr. pause, low Lat.

pauze.]

1. A stop; a place or time of intermission.

Neither could we ever come to any pause, whereon to rest our assurance this way. Hooker.

Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following with determin'd sword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause. Shaksp.

Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.

The punishment must always be rigorously exacted, and the blows by pauses laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the signs of a true sorrow. Locke.

Whilst those exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive some little pause of joys
In their great moments when their God employs Their industry. Prior.

What pause from woe, what hopes of comfort bring
The names of wife or great? Prior.

Our discourse is not kept up in conversation, but falls into more pauses and intervals than in our neighbouring countries. Addison.

2. Suspense; doubt.

Like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. Shaksp.

3. Break; paragraph; apparent separation of the parts of a discourse.

He writes with warmth, which usually neglects method, and those partitions and pauses which men, educated in the schools, observe. Locke.

4. Place of suspending the voice marked in writing thus—

5. A stop or intermission in music.

To PAUSE. v. n.

1. To wait; to stop; not to proceed; to forbear for a time; used both of speech and action.

Tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in shuffling wrong
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shaksp.

Give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I pause, serve in your harmony. Shaksp.

PAW

Pausing a while; thus to herself she mus'd.

As one who in his journey basks at noon,
Though bent on speed, to here the archangel paus'd,
Between a world destroy'd and world rector'd. Mil.

2. To deliberate.

Bear Worcester to death, and Vernon too,
Other offenders we will pause upon. Shaksp.

Solyman, pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being over, suffered himself to be increased. Kneller.

3. To be intermitted.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire,
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd? Tichel.

PAUSER, n. f. [from pause.] He who pauses; he who deliberates.

The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the pauser, reason. Shaksp.

PAW. n. f. [pawen, Welsh.]

1. The foot of a beast of prey.

One chose his ground,
Whence rushing he might swift seize them both,
Grip'd in each paw. Milton.

The bear, that tears the prey, and when pursued, lest he become a prey, goes backward into his den that the hunter rather mistakes than finds the way of his paw. Holyday.

The bee and serpent know their stings, and the bear the use of his paw. More against Atheism.

If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you should have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Estrange.

Each claims possession,
For both their paws are fasten'd on the prey. Dryden.

2. Hand. In contempt.

Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden.

To PAW. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.

The fiery courser when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets, and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight Shifts place, and paws, and hopes the promis'd fight. Dryden.

Th' impatient courser pants in every vein.
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain,
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

Once, a fiery horse, pawing with his foot, struck a hole in my handkerchief. Swift.

To PAW. v. a.

1. To strike with a drawn stroke of the fore foot.

His hot courser paw'd th' Hungarian plain.
And adverse legions flood the flock in van. Tichel.

PAWN. n. f. [pand, Dut. pan, French.]

1. Something given to pledge as a security for money borrowed or promise made.

Her oath for love, her honour's pawn. Shaksp.

As for mortgaging and pawning, men will not take pawns without use; or they will look for the forfeiture. Bacon.

He retains much of his primitive esteem, that abroad his very word will counteract the bond or pawn of another. Howell.

Here's the very heart, and soul, and life-blood of Gomes; pawns in abundance, till the next bribe helps their husbands to redeem them. Dryden.

2. The state of being pledged.

Sweet wife, my honour is at pawn.
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. Shaksp.

Redeem from buying pawn the blam'd crown, Wipe off the dust that hides our country's gilt. Shaksp.

3. A common name at chess.

PAY

Here I a pawn admire,
That still advancing high,
As top of all becomes Another thing and name. Cowley.

To PAWN. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to give in pledge. It is now seldom used but of pledges given for money.

I hold it cowardice
To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shaksp.

Let's lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses. Shaksp.

I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shak.

Will you thus break your faith?—
—I pawn'd you none: I promise you redress. Shaksp.

I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent. Shaksp.

If any thought annoys the gallant youth,
'Tis dear remembrance of that fatal glance,
For which he lately pawn'd his heart. Waller.

She who before had mortgag'd her estate,
And pawn'd the last remaining piece of plate. Dryden.

One part of the nation is pawned to the other,
with hardly a possibility of being ever redeemed. Swift.

PA'WN-BROKER. n. f. [pawn and broker.]

One who lends money upon pledge.

The usurers or money-changers were a sort of a scandalous employment at Rome; those money-scriveners seem to have been little better than our pawnbrokers. Arbuthnot.

To PAY. v. a. [paier, Fr. apagar, Span.

pacare, Latin.]

1. To discharge a debt. It is applied to debts of duty, as well as debts of commerce.

You have done enough, and have perform'd
A saint-like sorrow; and indeed paid down
More penitence, than done trespass. Shaksp.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man. Shaksp.

She does what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all. Shaksp.

The king and prince
Then paid their off'rings in a sacred grove
To Hercules. Dryden.

due with his money: as, he had paid his labourers.

4. To atone; to make amends by suffering; with for before the cause of payment.

If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shaksp.

Bold Prometheus, whose unman'd desire Rival'd the sun with his own heav'nly fire,
Now doom'd the Scythian vulture's cruel prey,
Severely pays for animating clay. Rowson.

Men of parts, who were to act according to the result of their debates, and often pay for their mistakes with their heads, found those scholastic forms of little use to discover truth. Locke.

5. To beat.

I follow'd me close, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid. Shaksp.

Forty things more, my friends, which you know true,
For which, or pay me quickly, or I'll pay you. Ben Jonson.

6. To reward; to recompense.

She I love, or laugh at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well; and pays me with disdain. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

7. To give the equivalent for any thing bought.

Riches are got by consuming lots of foreign curmodities, than what by commodities or labour is paid for. Locke.

It is very possible for a man that lives by cheating, to be very punctual in paying for what he buys; but then every one is assured that he does not do so out of any principle of true honesty. Law.

PAY. n. f. [from the verb.] Wages; hire; money given in return for service.

Come on, brave soldiers, doubt not of the day; And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. Shak.

The soldier is willing to be converted, for there is neither pay nor plunder to be got. L'Estrange.

Money, instead of coming over for the pay of the army, has been transfused thither for the pay of those forces called from thence. Temple.

Here only merit constant pay receives, Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives. Pope.

PAYABLE. adj. [payable, Fr. from pay.]

Presents the downy peach. Thomson.

To PEACH. v. n. [corrupted from impeach.]
To accuse of some crime.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first, and see whose oath will be believed, I'll trounce you. Dry.

PEACH-COLOURED. adj. [peach and colour.]
Of a colour like a peach.

One Mr. Caper comes to jail at the suit of Mr.
Threepite the mercer, for some four suits of peach- colour'd fustian, which now peaches him a beggar. Shakespeare.

PE-CHICK. n. f. [pea and chick.] The chick of a peacock.

Does the fowling peachick think to make a cuckold of me? Southern.

PEA-COCK. n. f. [papa, Sax. pavo, Latin.
Of this word the etymology is not known: perhaps it is peak cock, from the tuft of feathers on its head; the peak of women being an ancient ornament: if it be not rather a corruption of beaucoq, Fr.
from the more striking lustre of its spangled train.] A fowl eminent for the beauty of its feathers, and particularly of its tail.

Let frank Talbot triumph for a while;
And live a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shaksp.
The birds that are hardest to be drawn, are the tame birds, as cock, turkey-cock and peacock. Peacocks.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor ostrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the fable's tail. Guy.

2. Any thing acuminate.

3. The rising forepart of a headdress.

To PEAK. v. n. [pequeno, Spanish, little, perhaps lean; but I believe this word has some other derivation: we say a withered man has a sharp face; peck dying, is said to have a nose as sharp as a pen: from this observation, a tickly man is said to peck or grow acuminate, from peque.]

1. To look tickly.

Went's fe-nights, nine times nine,
Shall he twiddle, peck, and punce. Shakespeare.

2. To make a mean figure; to sneak.

I, a dull and muddy mentled rascal, peck,
Like John a dreams, unpregnant of my cause. Shakespeare.

The peaking cometh her husband, dwelling in a contumacious larion of jealousy, comes me in the midst of our encounter. Shakespeare.

PEAL. n. f. [perhaps from pello, pellere
tympanum.]

1. A succession of loud sounds: as of bells, thunder, cannon, loud instruments.
They were saluted by the way, with a fair peal
of artillery from the tower. Hayward.

The breath of truth cannot be so highly expected, as that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon.

Woods of Oranges will swell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a peal of indignance will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.

A peal shall rouse their sleep;
Then all thy faints assembled, thou shalt judge
Bad men and angels. Milton.

I myself,
Vanquish'd with a peal of words, O weaklings,
Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton.

VOL. II.

PEA

From the Moors camp the noise grows louder fill;

Peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns. Dryden.
Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, sea, and air, and heaven and Cato tremble!

2. It is once used by Shakespeare for a low dull noise, but improperly.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shard-born beetle with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Macbeth.

To PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.

Let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voiced quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may, with sweetest through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies.
And bring all heav'n before mine eyes. Milton.

The pealing organ, and the pealing choir;
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd. Ticket.

To PEAL. v. a.

1. To assail with noise.

Nor was his ear less peal'd
With noises loud and ruinous, than when Bellona Storms.

With all her batt'ring engines, bent to rase
Some capital city. Milton.

2. To stir with some agitation: as, to peal the pot, is when it boils to stir the liquor therein with a ladle. Ainsworth.

stone.] A sort of stone.

PEARL. n. f. [perle, Fr. perla, Spanish; supposed by Salmafus to come from spherula, Lat.]

1. Pearls, though esteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a distemper in the creature that produces them: the fish in which pearls are most frequently found is the East Indian berber or pearl oyster: others are found to produce pearls; as the common oyster, the muscle, and various other kinds; but the Indian pearls are superior to all:
some pearls have been known of the size of a pigeon's egg; as they increase in size, they are less frequent and more valued: the true shape of the pearl is a perfect round; but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve for ear-rings. Hill.

A pearl pulp was made of a distilled milk.

Flow's pushed, blue and white,
Like lappace, pearl, in rich combu dory
Bathed below in knight's bending knee. Shakespeare.

2 M

1. Appropriate; belonging to ~~anyone~~ with exclusion of others.

I agree with Sir William Temple, that the word humour is peculiar to our English tongue; but not that the thing itself is peculiar to the English, because the contrary may be found in many Spanish, Italian, and French productions. Swift.

2. Not common to other things.

The only sacred hymns they are that christianity hath peculiar unto itself, the other being songs too of praise and of thanksgiving, but songs wherewith as we serve God, so the Jews likewise. Hooker.

3. Particular; single. To join myself with peculiar, though found in Dryden, is improper.

One peculiar nation to select From all the rest, of whom to be invoc'd. Milton.
Space and duration being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may be of use for their illustration. Locke.
Neither fear, nor will provoke the war;
My fate is Juno's most peculiar care. Dryden.

- PECULIAR. n. f.
1. The property; the exclusive property.

By intinct or reflection, they augment

To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

2. A man vain of low knowledge; a man awkwardly ostentatious of his literature.

The pedant can hear nothing but in favour of the conceits he is amorous of. Gilchrist.
The preface has so much of the pedant, and to little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.

In learning let a nymph delight,
The pedant gets a mistress by't. Swift.
Pursuit of fame with pedants fills our schools,
And into exorcisms buries our souls. Young.

- PEDANTICAL. } adj. [pedantescus, Fr. from PEDANTICK. } pedant.] Awkwardly ostentatious of learning.

Mr. Cheeke had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues; but for other influences pedantick enough. Hanward.

When we see any thing in an obdurate that looks forced and pedantick, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet writ. Addison.

The obtrusiveness is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obtrusive by their pedantick elucidators. Pelton.

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantick and hateful, that a man should watch against every instance of it. Harris.

We now believe the Copernican system: yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun and planet, and not introduce a new pedantick description of them from the motion of the earth. Bentley.

- PEDANTICALLY. adv. [from pedantical.]
With awkward ostentation of literature.

The earl of Roehampton has excellently rendered it; too faithfully is, indeed, pedantick it is a faith like that which proceeds from superstition. Dryden.

- PEDANTRY. n. f. [pedanterie, Fr.] Awkward ostentation of needless learning.

'Tis a practice that savours much of pedantry, a reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school. Brown.

Horace has enticed me into this pedantry of quotation. Cowley.
Make us believe it, if you can: it is in Latin, if I may be allowed the pedantry of a quotation, non peruadebis, triumph peruadebis. Addison.

From the universities the young nobility are sent for fear of contracting any airs of pedantry by a college education. Swift.

As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands the same rank. Tupper.
Mortimer.

To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opheffen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Cajaubon, who derives it from emwippen, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]

1. To make the first appearance.

She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid.

Peeps forth and soon renews her native pale. Spens.

And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it.

Do plainly give you out an unflin'd shepherd Shaksp.

England and France might through their unity,
Dread him some prejudice, for from this league

Peep'd hither that menac'd him. Shakspare.

I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakspare.

The two sons madden-blossoms on each bough
Peep forth from the first blades; so that now

A thousand ruddy hopes flung in each bud,
And flatter'd every greedy eye that bud. Crashaw

With words not hers, and more than human sound,

She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears,
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryd.

Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear.

And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryden.

Printing and letters had just peep'd abroad in the world; and the reformers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the comb, break it open, you will find the spirit of a greater largeness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;

But those attain'd, so tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;

Th' increasing prospect tires our wading eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.

Most souls but peep out once on age,
Dull fallen prisoners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look slyly, closely; or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the same, which at my window peeps. Spenser.

Come thick night!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakspare's Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-pipe. Shakspare.

A fool will peep in at the door. Verdijallus.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dapping the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleveland.

All doors are shut, no let and peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryd.

The spring flames peep'd in, and saw from far
The awful accents of the sacred quire;
But since it was propitius'd by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it smug'd by fire. Dryden.

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.

Those remade and sad bodies were formed not merely to be peep'd at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons.

O my muse, just distance keep,
Thou art a mind, and must not peep. Prior.

In vain his little child en peep'd out Into the mungling storm, demand their fire. Thomf

PEEP. n. f.

1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.

2. A fly look.

Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t'other peep at the stars? Swift.

PEEPER. n. f. A young chicken just breaking the shell.

Dukes I chide, though little, yet gentle;
Smiles the first come, and peepers crown the meal. Bacon

PEEPHOLE. } n. f. [peep and hole.]
PEEPINGHOLE. } Hole through which one may look without being discovered.

The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. LeStrange.

That there lies eyes took distant aim? Prior.

PEER. n. f. [pair, French.]

1. Equal; one of the same rank.

His peer upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakspare.

Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity: and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Bacon.

Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him to great respect do'st bear!

That thou dost not him with to bright a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.

All these did wife Ulysses lead, in countess peer to Jove. Chapman.

In long he never had his peers,
From sweet Cecily down to chauncleer. Dryden.

3. Companion; fellow.

He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Spenser.

If you did more to night,
In the dances, with what sight
Of your peers you were beheld,
That at every motion twell'd. Ben Jonson.

Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryden.

4. A nobleman as distinct from a commoner: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their essential privileges are the same.

I shall thus pass with thy kingdom's wars,
That speak my salutation in their minds:
Had King of Scotland! Shakspare.

King Henry's peers and chief nobility
Defrey'd themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shakspare.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

To PEER. v. a. [by contraction from appeare.]

1. To come just in sight.

As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Shakspare.

Yet many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shakspare.

Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering. Shakspare.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonf.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.

Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear
They catch, while he, fool to himself makes love. Stebbs.

Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milton.

Peering in maps for ports, and peers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakspare.

PEERAGE. n. f. [pairie, Fr. from peer.]

1. The dignity of a peer.

His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fool, of rank or mongrel breed,
Who him would pass for lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Sayt.

2. The body of peers.

Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.

PEERLESS. n. f. [from peer.] Peerage.

Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shaksp.

Her peers, that led
The starry host, rode brightly till the moon,
Riding in cloudy majesty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.

Such much-worth'd were to blaze
The peerless light of her immortal praise,
Whole future lends us. Milton.

Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,
Were all observ'd, as well as heavenly face;
With such a peerless majesty she stands,
As in that day she took the crown. Dryden.

PEERLESSNESS. n. f. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.

PEEVISH. adj. [This word Junius, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from beech, as we say waspyish.]

1. Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; irascible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.

She is peevish, sullen, froward, Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty. Shaksp.

 ahead contained in the part, and forbid new humour.
 Bacon.
 Then armour help'd their harm, crush'd in and bound, Milton.
 Into their fulcrum pen.
 As when a prowling wolf
 Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
 Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve
 In hundred cotes, and the field secure,
 Leap o'er the fence with ease into the fold. Milton.
 The glays, wherein it is penned up, hindered it to deliver itself by an expansion of its parts. Boyle.
 The prevention of mischief is perpetrated by the Jewish custom, they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey.
 Ah! that your bullets had been mine,
 To pen the sheep. Dryden.
 2. [from the noun; pret. and part. pass. penit.]
 To write. It probably meant at first only the manual exercise of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long used with relation to the style or composition.
 For prey these shepherds too he took,
 Whole metal still he knew he could not bend
 With heavy pictures, or a window book,
 With me good dance or letter finely pen'd. Sidon.
 I would be loath to cut away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well pen'd, I have taken great pains to cut it. Shakespeare.
 Read this challenge, mark but the penning of it
Shakespeare.
 A sentence spoken by him in English, and penned out of his mouth, by four good secretaries, for trial of our orthography, was set down by them.
 Camden.
 He frequented sermons, and penned notes with his own hand. Hayward.
 The precepts penned, or preached by the holy apostles, were as divine and as perpetual in respect of obligation. White.
 The digressing my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict examination, as the penning them entails, they would have been disjointed and raving ones. Dodley.
 Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus.
 Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;
 The judges hearing with applause, at the end
 I read him, and said, no tool such lines had pen'd.

 penned, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.
 Twenty souls I never saw Come with petitions truly pen'd. Swift.
 Desiring I should stand their fault
 PENAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from puna, Lat.]
 1. Denouncing punishment; enacting punishment.
 Gratitude plants such generosity in the heart of man, as find more effectually incline him to what is brave and becoming than the terror of any penal South.
 2. Used for the purposes of punishment;
 vindictive.
 Admantine chains and penal law. Milton.
 PENALTY. n. f. [penalty, old Fr. h.]
 Liability to punishment; condemnation to punishment.
 Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and

P E N

some unto the penalty of contrary affirmations;
 but the experience of navigations can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.
 PEN'ALTY. n. f. [from penalite, old Fr.]
 1. Punishment; censure; judicial infliction.
 Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and consequently all less penalties, for preserving property, and employing the force of the community in the execution of laws. Locke.
 Beneath her footstool, science grows in chains,
 And we dread's Oyle, penalties, and pains. Daniel.
 2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.
 Lend this money, not as to thy friend,
 But lend it rather to thine enemy,
 Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face,
 Exact the penalty. Shakespeare.
 PENANCE. n. f. [penence, old Fr. for penitence.]
 Infliction either publick or private, suffered as an expression of repentance for sin.
 And bitter penance with an iron whip.
 Was wont him once to discipline every day. Spenser.
 Mew her up,
 And make her hear the penances of her tongue. Shak.
 No penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to freight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counsel'd him to have given over the pursuit of his right. Bacon.
 The scourge
 Inexorable, and the torturing hour
 Calls us to penance. Milton.
 A Lorum surgeon, who whipped the naked part with a great rod of nettles till all over blistered, persuaded him to perform this penance in a sharp fit
 he had. Temple.
 PENCE. n. f. The plural of penny; formed from pennus, by a contraction usual in the rapidity of colloquial speech.
 The time servant found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. Matthew.
 PENCIL. n. f. [penicillum, Lat.]
 1. A small brush of hair which painters dip in their colours.
 The Indians will perfectly represent in feathers whatsoever they see drawn with pencils. Heylin.
 Pencils can by one slight touch restore Smiles to those changed face, that wept before. Dryd.
 For thee the gloves green fly we wear,
 And nature's ready pencil paints the flow'rs. Dryd.
 A sort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the pencil on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.
 The faithful pencil has design'd
 Some bright idea of the matter sunud,
 Where a new world leaps out at his command,
 And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.
 2. A black lead pen, with which, cut to a point, they write without ink.
 Mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in the books you desire to remember. Harris.
 3. An instrument of writing without ink.
 To PENCIL. v. n. [from the noun.] To paint.
 Painting is almost the natural man,
 For hence dishonest trafficks with man's nature,
 He is but a child; pencil'd figures are even such as they give out. Shakespeare.
 Pulse of all kinds distill'd their odorous powers,
 Where nature pencils butterflies on flow'rs. Harte.
 PENDANT. n. f. [pendant, Fr.]
 1. A jewel hanging in the ear.
 The tips
 Some third the mazy ringlets of her hair,
 Some hang upon the pendents of her ear. Pope.
 2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.
 Unripe fruit, whole verdant stalks do cleave
 Close to the tree, which greaves no less to leave
 The smiling pendant which adorns her face,
 And until autumn on the bough should grow. Waller.
 3. A pendulum. Obsolete.
 To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hung before. Dodley.

 4. A small flag on ships.
 PENDENCE. n. f. [from pendeo, Latin.]
 Slopeness; inclination.
 The Italians give the cover a graceful pendence or slopeness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest top or ridge from the lowest. Wotton.
 PENDENCY. n. f. [from pendeo, Latin.]
 Suspension; delay of decision.
 The judge shall pronounce in the principle cause,
 nor can the appellant allege pendency of suit. Ayliffe.
 PENDENT. adj. [pendens, Lat. some write pendant, from the Fr.]
 1. Hanging.
 Quant in green she shall be loose enrob'd,
 With ribbons pendent, flaring about her head. Shak.
 I sometimes mournful verse indite, and sing
 Of desperate lady near a purling stream,
 Or lover pendent on a willow tree. Philips.
 2. Jutting over.
 A pendent rock,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory
 With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock her eyes with air. Shakespeare.

 defended in the possession. Ayliffe.
 PENDULOSITY. n. f. [from pendulus.]
 PENDULOUSNESS. n. f. The state of hanging; suspension.
 His slender legs he encreased by riding, that is the humours descended upon their pendulosity, having no support or impediments stability. Bohn.
 PENDULOUS. adj. [pendulus, Latin.]
 Hanging; not supported below.
 All the plagues, that in the pendulous air Hang late o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters. Shakespeare.
 Bellmerphion's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Bacon.
 The lumbis are furnished with three roots, as in the upper part of a foot, because there are pendulous. Re.
 PENDULUM. n. f. [pendulus, Lat. pendulus, Fr.] Any weight hung to as that it may easily swing backward and forward, of which the great law is, that its oscillations are always performed in equal time
 Upon the bench I vent to handle 'em,
 That the vibration of this pendulum
 Shall make all wayles goods of one Unanimous opinion. Hudibras.
 PENETRABILITY. n. f. [from penetrabilis.]
 Susceptibility of impression from another body.
 There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the minute rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Chambers.
 PENETRABLE. adj. [penetrabilis, Lat.]
 1. Such as may be pierced; such as may admit the entrance of another body.
 Let thine airy dart,
 And pierce his only penetrable part. Dodley.
 2. Susceptive of moral or intellectual impression.
 I am not made of stone,
 But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shakespeare.
 Peace,
 And let me wring your heart, for so I shall,
 If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakespeare.

PEN

PENETRAIL. n. f. [penetrabilis, Lat.] Interior parts. Not in use.

The heart resists parental fumes, and whose penetrails to minuate some time must be allowed. Harvey

PENETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrant.] Power of entering or piercing.

The faculty, activity and penetrancy of its oblique obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray

PENETRANT. adj. [penetrant, French.]

Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtle.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient places promoted by warmth, the ascending streams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle

The food mingled with some dissolved juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the inner part finds its way in at the slightest orifices of the lacteous veins. Hugb.

TO PENETRATE. v. a. [penetro, Latin; penetrer, Fr.]

1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.

Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetrating. Arbutnot.

2. To affect the mind.

3. To reach the meaning.

There is all we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too obscure for us to penetrate. Reg.

TO PENETRATE. v. n.

1. To make way.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate, But where heart's sin in secret place can penetrate: Though the same sun with all dissolving rays Shine in the robe, and on the diamond blaze, We praise the stronger effort of his power, And always let the gem above the flower. Pope.

2. To make way by the mind.

We reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the mind and reality of the thing. Locke

PENETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr. from penetrate.]

1. The act of entering into any body.

It warms The universe, and to each inward part With gentle penetration though unseen Sports invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of one who deigns rather of the three learned professions. Watts

3. Acuteness; sagacity.

The proudest admirer of his own parts might combat with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Harris

PENETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrare.]

2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.

O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found The tooth sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drew'd. Swift

3. Having the power to impress the mind.

Would'st thou see Thy master thus with plerid mus, bending down His congeal'd neck, his face tab'd'd To penetrate thence. Shakespeare

PENETRATIVENESS. n. f. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.

PENGUIN. n. f. [anser magellanicus, Lat.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is supposed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signifying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:

PEN

British Indians nam'd from penguins.

Grege gives another account of the name, deriving it from pignus, Latin, fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.

The penguin is called from his extraordinary fatness. For though he be not heavier than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds, his wings are extreme short and little, altogether useless for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly. Grege.

2. A fruit.

The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the piece of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp and thinsy: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Mitci

PENTASULA. n. f. [Latin, pene insula; pentagula, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

And of Althos hath the pentagula of linkwork, on whose neck and flanks stand an ancient hood. Casson

PENTASULATED. adj. [from pentagula.] Almost surrounded by water.

PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, Fr. penitentie, Lat.] Repentance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amendments of life or change of the affections.

Death is order'd, and penitence has room To mitigate, if not to reverse the doom. Dryden.

PENITENT. adj. [penitent, Fr. penitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and resolutely amending life.

Much it galls me

To see you become so penitent. Shakespeare.

Nor to the land of their captivity

Humild thank-lives, or penitent be sought

The God of their forefathers. Milton.

Provoking God to raise them enemies;

From whom as oft he takes them penitent. Milton.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,

Nor to rebuke the rich oppressor rear'd.

His preaching merrily, but more his practice wrong hit,

A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

PENITENT. n. f.

1. One sorrowful for sin.

Conceded treasures shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose carities the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon

The penitence, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is rewarded on while all the appetites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the temptations of sin in their full force. Rivers

2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.

The counterfeit Dionysius defenks the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and plains, and then excluded. Stillingfleet

3. One under the direction of a confessor.

PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.

I have done penance for contemning love, Whole high imperious thorns his love punish'd me With bitter falls and penitential groans. Shakespeare.

Is it strange, that a rational man could adore tears and garlick, and shed penitential tears at the sight of a deuced onion? South.

PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitential, Fr. penitentielle, low Lat.] A book directing the degrees of penance.

The penitential or book of penance contained such matters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconciliation of the person that incurred penance. Ayliffe

PEN

PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitencier, Fr. penitentiarius, low Lat.]

1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.

Upon the loss of Ubin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to thrust penance to expiate his first offence, would have committed him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prudently re-obtained. Bacon.

The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Ayliffe.

2. A penitent; one who does penance.

A penit is named John Northampton's liberty, who, for abusing the power in his muny mayonality of London, was condemned hither as a perpetual penitentiary. Corne.

 I say nothing to him, for he hath neither Latin, French nor Italian, and you may come into court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth of the English.
 Shakespeare.
 Lucian affirms, that the souls of virtuous after their death are translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain days for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides by cudgel and spur.
 French.
 Though in purchases of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains.
 Scott.
 3. Something advantageously bought; a purchase got for less than it is worth.
 For time he pray'd, but let the event declare
 He had no mighty pennyworth at his pray'r.
 Dryden.
 4. A small quantity.
 My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me and who dispute me I am.
 Swift.
 PENSILE, adj. [penilis, Lat.]
 1. Hanging; suspended.
 Two trepidations; the one manifest and local, as of the ball when it is penile, the other, secret of the minute parts.
 Bacon.
 This ethereal space,
 Yielding to earth and sea the middle place,
 Anxious I ask you, how the penile ball
 Should never strive to rise, nor never fear to fall.
 Prior.
 2. Supported above the ground.
 The marble brought, erect the famous dome,
 Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
 On which the planted grove and penile garden grows.
 Prior.

 Shakespeare.
 Anxious cares the penfiv nymph oppress,
 And secret passions labour'd in her breast.
 Pope.
 2. It is generally and properly used of persons; but Prior has applied it to things.
 We at the sad approach of death shall know
 The truth, which from these penfiv numbers flow,
 That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe.
 Prior.
 PENSIVELY, adv. [from penfiv.] With melancholy; sorrowfully; with gloomy seriousness.
 So fair a lady did I spy,
 On Herbs and flowers she walked penfively
 And, but yet love she proudly did forsake.
 Spenser.
 PENSIVENESS, n. f. [from penfiv.] Melancholy; sorrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.
 Concerning the blessings of God, whether they tend unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath penfivness and fear, the other always joy annexed.
 Hooker.
 Would'st thou unlock the door
 To cold despair and glooming penfivness?
 Herbert.

nium; pericrane, Fr.] The membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sensitive, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periostrum.
Quincy.
Having divided the pericranium, I saw a suture running the whole length of the wound. Weyman.
PERICULOUS, adj. [periculosus, Latin.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. Not in use.
As the moon every seventh day arriveth into a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth execute these periculous periods. Bacon.
PERIGERY, n. f. [περι and γερ.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.
PERIGEE, n. f. [περι and γει; perigee, Latin.] That point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.
By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the peri- geon or nearest point in Libra. Bacon.
PERIHELUM, n. f. [περι and ηλιος; peri- helio, Fr.] That point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.
Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50,000 years a cooling. Shyne.
PERIL, n. f. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dut. peri- culum, Latin.]
1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.
Dear Puerles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world,
and now do not to tell of your perils. Sidney.
How many perils do mislead
The righteous man to make him daily fall? Spenser.
In the net what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.
The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have per'd the perils of a hard way. Dryden.
Strongly and young people are more peril
by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbuth.
2. Denunciation; danger denounced.
I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakspere.
PERILOUS, adj. [periculosus, Fr. from peril.]
1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.
Alterations in the fervor of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weal, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto
it. Hooker.
Her guard is elasticity;
She that has that is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows kern
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Innum'ous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.
Debate propensions to my dutious ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful leer:
Per perilous th' assay, unheard the toil.
I'll elude the precience of a God by guile. Pope.
2. It is used by way of emphasis, or hudi-crous exaggeration of any thing bad.
Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous to end. Madibras.

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly perilous.
Tis a perilous boy.
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shaksp.
PERILOUSLY, adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.
PERILOUSNESS, n. f. [from perilous.] Dangerousness.
PERIMETER, v. n. [περι and μετρο; peri- metre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.
By comprehending the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton.
PERIOD, n. f. [periode, Fr. περιδος.]
1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.
Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a sylable of this new doctrine. Watts.
3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning.
A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends. Holder.
We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.
4. The end or conclusion.
If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of thy tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shaksp.
There is nothing so fierce that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; while-ever concerns this lublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory.
What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal period!
Oft 'tis a dreadful inter-act of time. Addison.
5. The state at which any thing terminates.
Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and sudden fates. Sackling.
Light-conquering fumes must set in the sun before they retain heat, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.
6. Length of duration.
Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than the ordinary period;
as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon.
7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.
Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long: for to they have their strength too as in a pique or javelin. Ben Jonson.
Is this the confidence you gave me?
Lemon is safely, not a period.
Shall be unaid for me. Milton.
Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy,
cunningly wrapt up in a truth period. Tacite.
For the assistance of memory, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts.
8. A course of events, or series of things memorably terminated: as, the periods of an empire.

From the tongue
The unfinish'd period stills. Thomson's Spring.
PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.
Your letter he defies
To those have shut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shakespeare's Timon
PERIODICAL. adj. [periodique, Fr. from PERIODICK. } period.]
1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.
Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should not of those kindly increases of day and night Deham.
Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.
2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.
Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some stony soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.
3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.
The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.
4. Relating to periods or revolutions.
It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.
PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.
The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Brown.
PERISTEUM. n. f. [περί and στεῖον; peristē, French.]
All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the peristēum. Cheyne.
PERIPHARY. n. f. [περί and φέρω; periphēre, Fr.] Circumference.
Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.
TO PERIPHRASE. v. a. [periphrasē, Fr.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.
PERIPHRASTIC. n. f. [περίφραστικός; periphraстикos, Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one: as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.
She contains all blifs,
And makes the world but her periphrasis. Cleavel.
They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphrasis for this number seven. Brown.
They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphrasis on every word of the book they explain. Watts.
The periphrases and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.
PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphrasis.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.
PERIPNEUMONY. n. f. [περί and πνεῦμα; peripneumonia, Fr.]
PERIPNEUMONIA. n. f. [from peripneumonia.] An inflammation of the lungs.
Lungs oft inbibing phlegmatick and melancholick humours, are now and then deprehended (chirous, by disipation of the subtiler parts, and lapiidification of the grosser that may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.
A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbuthnot.

TO PERISH. v. n. [perir, Fr. perco, Lat.]
1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing. It seems to have for or with before a cause, and by before an instrument. Locke has by before the cause.
I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakespeare.
It I have seen any perish for want of clothing—then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade. Joh.
He lecepth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword, Joh.
They perish quickly from off the good land. Deuteronomy.
I perish with hunger. Luke.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.
Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.
Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.
Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds, Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.
In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.
2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.
Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.
3. To be lost eternally.
These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter.
O fuller m— not to perish in my sin: Lord, carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish? Morrison.
TO PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay.
Not in use.
The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sand,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakespeare.
Rufes prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.
He was so reserved, that he would impart his secret to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier.
Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the public we forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.
PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.
We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.
To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.
It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts, but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.
Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.
Thrice has he seen the perishable kind
Of men decay. Pope.
PERISHABLENESS. n. f. [from perishable.] Liableness to be destroyed; liableness to decay.
Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonness and perishableness fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge possessions beyond the use of his family? Locke.
PERISTALTIC. adj. [περιστάλτις; peristaltique, Fr.]
Peristaltick motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are press'd downwards and voided. Querc.

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbuthnot.
PERISTERION. n. f. The herb vervain. Diet.
PERISTYLE. n. f. [peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars.
The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbuthnot.
PERISTYSTOLE. n. f. [περί and στυλή; peristystole, Fr.] The pause or interval between the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of the diastole or dilatation. Diet.
PERITONEUM. n. f. [περιτόναιος; peritoneum, Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Diet.
Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such a reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wijman.
PERJURY. n. f. [perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or sworn person. Not in use.
Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simulator of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakespeare.
TO PERJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Latin] To swear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun; as he perjured himself.
Who should be trusted now, when the right hand is perjur'd to the bosom? Shakespeare.
The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Timothy.
PERJURER. n. f. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.
The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.
PERJURY. n. f. [perjurium, Latin.] False oath.
My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick, Cried aloud—What courage for perjury Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? And so he vanish'd. Shakespeare.
PERIWIG. n. f. [péruque, Fr.] Adorned hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakespeare.
It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare.
The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tires
In lovers sonnets. Dante.
Madam Time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd. Cleaveland.
For valuing of their visages his highness and the marquiss bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Hutton.
They used false hair on periwigs,
From her own head Megara takes A periwig of twisted snakes. Suys.
TO PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.
Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltic ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods. Sylvester.
Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crowded round with antick shapes,
Disord' periwig'd with snakes,
See this dreadful brides she takes. Swift.

PERIWINKLE. n. f.

1. A small shellfish; a kind of fish shell. This is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevelled about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and of eel shells. Peacham.

2. [climatis. A plant.]

There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.

The common simples with us are comfrey, buple, ladies mantle, and periwinkle. Wicam.

To PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.

If, after all, you think it a disgrace, That Edward's mistress perks it in your face; To see a piece of failing flesh and blood, In all the rest so unpudently good; Faith, let the modest matrons of the town Come here in crowds, and stare the strumpet down. Pope.

To PERK. v. a. To dress; to prunk.

'Tis better to be lowly born, And range with humble livers in content, Than to be perk'd up in a glittering grief, And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.

PERK, adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.

My ragged routs Went in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails, Perk as a peacock, but nought avails. Spenser.

PERILOUS, adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.

A perilous passage lies, Where many mairmaids haunt, making false melodies. Spenser.

Late he far'd In Phœdra's fleet bark over the perilous shard. Spens.

PERVAGY, n. f. A little Turkish boot. Diet.

PERMANENCE. } n. f. [from permanent.]

PERMANENCY. } Duration; consistency; continuance in the same state; lastingness.

Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain uncompacted. Boyle.

Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanence or fix'dness in being? Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet.

Continuance in rest. Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.

PERMANENT, adj. [from permanent, French; permanens, Latin.]

Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then will all laws which he hath made be necessarily for ever permanent, though they be but of circumstance here. Hooker.

That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly inconceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. More.

Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence From sin, as did my frailter innocence; For joy increase, with no more sorrow mixt, Immortal stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

Of long continuance.

Its meaning is, that in these, or such other light cases, which either leave no permanent effect, or only such as may be born without any great prejudice, we should exercise our patience. Kettlewell.

PERMANENTLY, adv. [from permanent.]

Durably; lastingly.

It does, like a compact or confident body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.

PERMANENCE, n. f. [from permaneo, Lat.] Continuance.

Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permanency in either. Brown.

PERMEABLE, adj. [from permeo, Latin.] Such as may be pass'd through.

The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air. Boyle.

PERMEANT, adj. [from permeans, Lat.] Passing through.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the mesentericks. Brown.

To PERMEATE, v. a. [from permeo, Latin.] To pass through.

This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyss, pervading not only the fibres, but the very bodies of the strata, permeating the interstices of the sand, or other matter whereof they consist. Woodward.

PERMEATION, n. f. [from permeate.] The act of passing through.

PERMISCIBLE, adj. [from permiscere, Lat.] Such as may be mingled.

PERMISSIBLE, adj. [from permisus, Latin.] What may be permitted.

PERMISSION, n. f. [from permissio, Fr. permissus, Lat.] Allowance; grant of liberty.

With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd, The williger I go. Milton.

You have given me your permission for this address, and encouraged me by your painful and approbation. Dryden.

PERMISSIVE, adj. [from permitto, Lat.]

1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.

We bid this be done, When evil deeds have their permissive pass, And not the punishment. Shakespeare.

Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks Invisible, except to God alone By his permissive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.

2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.

If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permissive, it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon.

Thus I embolden'd spoke, and freedom us'd Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.

With what permissive glory since his fall Was left him, or half glitter. Milton.

PERMISSIVELY, adv. [from permissivus.] By bare allowance; without hindrance.

As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to declare it. Bacon.

PERMISTION, n. f. [from permisus, Lat.] The act of mixing.

To PERMIT, v. a. [from permitto, Lat. permittere, Fr.]

1. To allow without command.

What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permitteth with approbation either to be done or left undone. Hooker.

2. To suffer without authorizing or approving.

3. To allow; to suffer.

Women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak. 1 Corinthians.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden.

Age oppresses us by the same degrees that it instructs us, and permits not that our mortal members, which are frozen with our years, should retain the vigour of our youth. Dryden.

We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any reliquy, any desire of itself there. Locke.

TO PERPEND. v. a. [perpendo, Latin.] To weigh in the mind; to consider attentively.

Thus it remains and the remainder thus.

Perpend. Shakspere.

Perpend, my prince, and give ear. Shakspere.

Consider the different conceits of men, and duly

perpend the imperfection of their discourses. Brown.

PERPENDINGER. n. f. [perpigne, French.] A coping stone.

PERPENDICULAR. n. f. [perpendicular, Fr. perpendicularum, Lat.] Any thing hanging down by a straight line. Dut.

PERPENDICULAR. adj. [perpendicular, Fr. perpendicularis, Lat.]

1. Crossing any other line at right angles. Of two lines, if one be perpendicular, the other is perpendicular too.

It is a line oblique their atoms rove,

Or in a perpendicular they move;

If some advance not slower in their race,

And some more swift, how could they be entangled?

Blackmore.

The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton.

2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown.

PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.

Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not restored down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.

PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpendicular.]

1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.

2. In the direction of a straight line up and down.

Tea masts attached make not the altitude,

Which thus last perpendicularly fall'n. Shakspere.

Iron refrigerated north and south, not only require a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same.

Brown.

Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly from the earth,

the arrow will return to your foot again. More.

All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.

PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from perpendicular.]

The state of being perpendicular.

The meeting of two lines in the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity of these lines is the difference of a right angle.

Watts.

PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpend.] Consideration. Not in use.

Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown.

TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [perpetro, Lat. perpetrari, Fr.]

1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.

Hear of such a crime

As tragick poets, since the birth of time,

Ne'er learn'd a thronging audience to amaze;

But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate.

My tender infants or my careful fire,

Thine they returning will to death require,

Will perpetrate on them the first design,

And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryd.

The forest, which, in after-times,
Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,
A sacred refuge made. Dryden.

2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,

Or sure hand can always hit;

For whatso'er we perpetrate,

We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.

PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrate.]

1. The act of committing a crime.

A desperate discontented assassin would, after the perpetration, have hunted a mere private revenge. Wotton.

A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be inensibly drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.

2. A bad action.

The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetration.

King Charles.

PERPETUAL. adj. [perpetuel, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]

1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to fatuity.

Under the same moral, and therefore under the same perpetual law. Holyday.

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be,

If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.

2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.

Within those banks rivers now

Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.

Milton.

By the nutular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.

3. Perpetual screw. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.

A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkins.

PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetual.]

Constantly; continually; incessantly.

This verse is every where sounding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.

In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another? Newton.

The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Sweet.

TO PERPETUATE. v. a. [perpetuer, Fr. perpetuo, Lat.]

1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternize.

Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.

Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation so necessary to mankind. Forbes.

2. To continue without cessation or intermission.

What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? to give men

no rest in their sin, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from their lethargick sleep, and arise from so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.

PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuate.]

The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.

Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown.

PERPETUITY. n. f. [perpetuité, French; perpetuitas, Latin.]

1. Duration to all fatuity.

For men to alter those laws, which God for peperuity hath established, were presumption and intolerable. Hooker.

Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity, than he cur'd

By the sure physician, death. Shakspere.

Time as long again

Would be fill'd up with our thanks; and

And yet we should, for perpetuity,

Go hence in debt. Shakspere.

Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.

There can be no other assurance of the perpetuity of this church, but what we have from him that built it. Pearson.

2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.

A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends,

and so obtains a perpetuity. Howe.

What the gospel enjoins is a constant disposition,

a mind to practice all christian virtues, as often a time and opportunity require; and not a perpetuaof exercise and action; it being impossible at one and the same time to discharge variety of duties. Nepe.

3. Something of which there is no end.

A piece of postage for a birth-right, a present repaid for a perpetuity. South.

The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion; is, that he first has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South.

The laws of God as well as of the land

Abhor a perpetuity should stand;

Edicts have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pe.

TO PERPLEX. v. a. [perplexus, Lat.]

1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to trouble with suspense or ambiguity; to distract,

to embarrass; to puzzle.

Being greatly perplexed in his mind, he determined to go into Persia. I Maccabees.

Themselves with doubts the day and night perplex. Droghda.

He perplexes the minds of the fair sex, with speculations of philosophy, when he should engage their hearts. Dyer.

We can distinguish no general truths, or at least shall be apt to perplex the mind. Locke.

My way of stating the main question is plain and clear; yours obscure and ambiguous: mine is fitted to instruct and inform; yours to perplex and confound a reader. Watts.

2. To make intricate; to involve; to complicate.

Their way

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood

Milnes.

We both are involv'd

In the same intricate perplex'd distress. Addison.

What was thought obscure, perplexed, and too hard for our weak parts, will be open to the reader standing in a fair view. Locke.

3. To plague; to torment; to vex.

sense not proper, nor used.

Chloe's the wonder of her sex,

'Tis well her heart is tender,

How might such killing eyes perplex,

With virtue to defend her. Graville.

PERPLEX. adj. [perplex, French; perplexus,

Latin.] Intricate; difficult. Perplex is the word in use.

How the soul directs the spirits for the motion of the body, according to the several animal exercises is perplex in the theory. Glanville.

PERPLEXEDLY. adv. [from perplexed.]

Intricately; with involution.

PERPLEXEDNESS. n. f. [from perplexed.]

1. Embarrassment; anxiety.

2. Intricacy; involution; difficulty.

Obscurity and perplexedness have been cast upon

St. Paul's epistles from without. Locke.

PERPLEXITY. n. f. [perplexité, Fr.]

1. Anxiety; distraction of mind.

PER

PERSON. n. f. [persona, French; persona, Latin.]

1. Individual or particular man or woman.
A person is a thinking intelligent being, who has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself, the same thinking thing in different times and places.

2. Man or woman considered as opposed to things, or distinct from them.

A seal for persons is far more easily to be perverted, than a seal for things. Sprat.
 To that we owe the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions. Atterbury.

3. Individual; man or woman.
This was then the church, which was daily increased by the addition of other persons received into it.

4. Human being, considered with respect to mere corporal existence.

5. Man or woman considered as present.

If I am traduc'd by tongues that neither know

"Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through."

The rebels maintained the fight for a small time, and for their persons showed no want of courage.

6. A general loose term for a human being; one; a man.

7. One's self; not a representative.

When I purposed to make a war by my lieutenant, I made declaration thereof by my chapellor, but now that I mean to make war upon France is fourth commandment, and all other legal rites and observations. White.

Our Saviour in his own person, during the time of his incarnation, duly observed the Sabbath.

The king in person visits all around;
Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound,
And holds for thrice three days a royal feast. Dryd.

8. Exterior appearance.
For her own person,
It bore no ill description.

9. Man or woman represented in a fictitious dialogue.

All things are lawful unto me, saith the apostle, speaking, as it becometh, in the person of the christian gentile for the maintenance of liberty in things indifferant. Hooker.

These tables Cicero pronounced, under the person of Crassus, were of more use and authority than all the books of the philosophers. Baker on Learning,

1. Character

From his first appearance upon the stage, in his new person of a sycophant or juggler, instead of his former person of a prince, he was exposed to the derision of the courtiers and the common people, who flocked about him, that one might know where the owl was, by the flight of birds. Bacon.

He hath put on the person not of a robber and murderer, but of a traitor to the state. Hammond.

i i. Character of office.
I then did use the person of your father;

The image of his power lay then in me :
And in th' administration of his law,
While I was busy for the commonwealth.

Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shalisp.
How different is the same man from himself, as he suffers the suffer of a man's life and that of a

12. [In grammar.] The quality of the

Do is the more blushed at her smiling, and the

the more lulled at his bluntness, because he had, with the remembrance of that pilgrimage he was in, forgot in speaking of himself the third person. Sidney.

If speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural is with greater latitude.

PERSONABLE. adj. [from person.]

1. Handsome; graceful; of good appearance.

Woe it was that her son Ninus had such a fate, as that Semiramis, who was very personable, could be taken for him; yet it is unlikely that she could have held the empire forty-two years after by any such fatality. Religion.

2. [In law.] One that may maintain any plea in a judicial court. Ainsworth.

PERSONAGE. n. f. [personage, Fr.]

1. A considerable person; man or woman of eminence.

It was a new sight fortune had prepared to those woods, to see their great personages thus run one after the other. Sidney.

It is not easy to research the actions of eminent personages, how much they have blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton.

2. Exterior appearance; air; stature.

She hath made compare Between our stature, she hath urg'd his height; And with her personage, her tall personage, she hath prevail'd with him. Shakespeare.

The lord Sudley was fierce in courage, courtly in fashion, in personage stately, in voice magnificent, but somewhat empty of matter. Hayward.

3. Character assumed.

The great diversion is masking; the Venetians, naturally grave, love to give into the follies of such persons, when disguised in a false personage. Addison.

4. Character represented.

Some persons must be found out, already known by history, whom we may make the actors and personages of this fable. Bacon.

PERSONAL. adj. [personel, Fr. personalis, Lat.]

1. Belonging to men or women, not to things; not real.

Every man to be termed by way of personal difference only. Hooker.

2. Affecting individuals or particular people; peculiar; proper to him or her; relating to one's private actions or character.

For my part, I know no personal cause to spurn at him; But for the general. Shakespeare.

It could not mean, that Cain as elder had a natural dominion over Abel, for the words are conditional; if thou doest well: and so personal to him. Locke.

Publick reproofs of sin are general, though by this they lose a great deal of their effect; but in private conversations the application may be more personal, and the proofs when so directed come home. Keyser.

If he imagines there may be no personal pride, vain fondness of themselves, in those that are patched and dressed out with so much glitter of art or ornament, let him only make the experiment. Law.

3. Present; not acting by representative.

The favourites that the absent king In deputation left, When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakespeare.

This immediate and personal speaking of God Almighty to Abraham, Job, and Moses, made not all his precepts and dictates, delivered in this manner, simply and eternally moral; for some of them were personal, and many of them ceremonial and judicial. White.

4. Exterior; corporal.

This herick countess determined him to desire in marriage a prince, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

5. [In law.] Something moveable; something appendant to the person, as money; not real, as land.

This sin of kind not personal, But real and hereditary was. Darwin.

6. [In grammar.] A personal verb is that which has all the regular modification of the three persons; opposed to impersonal, that has only the third.

PERSONALITY. n. f. [from personal.] The existence or individuality of any one.

Person belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery: this personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness, whereby it imputes to itself past actions, just upon the same ground that it does the present. Locke.

PERSONALLY. adv. [from personal.]

1. In person; in presence; not by representative.

Approbation not only they give, who personally declare their assent by voice, sign, or act, but also when others do it in their names. Hooker.

I could not personally deliver to her What you commanded me, but by her woman I sent your message. Shakespeare.

There are many reasons why matters of such a wonderful nature should not be taken notice of by those pagan writers, who lived before our Saviour's disciples had personally appeared among them. Addison.

2. With respect to an individual; particularly.

She bore a mortal hatred to the house of Lancaster, and personally to the king. Bacon.

3. With regard to numerical existence.

The converted man is personally the same he was before, and is neither born nor created anew in a proper literal sense. Rogers.

TO PERSONATE. v. a. [from persona, Lat.]

1. To represent by a fictitious or assumed character, so as to pass for the person represented.

This lad was not to personate one, that had been long before taken out of his cradle, but a youth that had been brought up in a court, where infinite eyes had been upon him. Bacon.

2. To represent by action or appearance; to act.

Herself a while she lays aside, and makes Ready to personate a mortal part. Crahe.

If it tend to danger, they turn about the perspective, and show it to little, that he can scarce discern it. Deham.

It may impart into this calm, to hearthen to the storm rising abroad; and by the best perspectives, to discover from what onsets they break. Temple.

You hold the glass, but turn the perspective. And farther off the lesson's object drive. Dryden.

Faith for reason's glimmering light shall give Her immortal perspective. Prior.

2. The science by which things are ranged in picture, according to their appearance in their real situation.

Medals have represented their buildings according to the rules of perspective. Addison.

3. View; vision.

Lofty trees, with sacred shades, And perspectives of pleasant glades, Where nymphs of brightest form appear. Dryden.

PERSPECTIVE. adj. Relating to the science of vision; optick; optical.

We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations; and out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.

PERSPICACIOUS. adj. [perspicax, Lat.]

Quick-sighted; sharp of sight.

It is as nice and tender in feeling, as it can be perspicacious and quick in feeling. South.

PERSPICACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from perspicacious.] Quickness of sight.

PERSPICACITY. n. f. [perspicacitas, Fr.]

Quickness of sight.

He that laid the foundations of the earth cannot be excluded the secrecy of the mountains; nor can there any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes, which were before light, and in whose optics there is no opacity. Brown.

PERSPICIENCE. n. f. [perspicience, Latin.]

The act of looking sharply. Dkt.

PERSPICIL. n. f. [perspicillum, Latin.]

A glass through which things are viewed; an optick glass. Little used.

Let truth be Ne'er so far distant, yet chronology, Sharp-sighted as the eagle's eye, that can Out-stare the broad-beam'd day's meridian, Will have a perspicil to find her out, And through the night of error and dark doubt, Discern the dawn of truth's eternal ray, As when the rosy morn buds into day. Crahe.

The perspicil, as well as the needle, hath enlarged the habitable world. Glanville.

PERSPICUITY. n. f. [perspicuitas, Fr. from perspicuus.]

1. Transparency; translucency; diaphaneity.

As for diaphaneity and perspicuity it enjoyeth that most eminently, as having its earthy and insubstantial parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous. Brown.

2. Clearness to the mind; easiness to be understood; freedom from obscurity or ambiguity.

The verses containing precepts, have not so much need of ornament as of perspicuity. Dryden.

Perspicuity consists in the using of proper terms for the thoughts, which a man would have pass from his own mind into that of another's. Locke.

PERSPICUOUS. adj. [perspicuus, Lat.]

1. Transparent; clear; such as may be seen through; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

As contrary causes produce the like effects, so even the same proceed from black and white; for the clear and perspicuous body effecteth white, and that white a black. Frachan.

2. Clear to the understanding; not obscure; not ambiguous.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance, Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shak.

All this is so perspicuous, so undeniable, that it need not be over industrious in the proof of it. Spratt.

PERSPICUOUSLY. adv. [from perspicuus.] Clearly; not obscurely.

The coin is so perspicuously made than refused; it is made not overwrought, but plainly and perspicuously. Brown.

PERSPICUOUSNESS. n. s. [from perspicuus.] Clearness; freedom from obscurity; transparency; diaphaneity.

PERSPIRABLE. adj. [from perspire.]

1. Such as may be emitted by the cuticular pores.

In an animal under a course of hard labour, aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to too strong a perspiration, debility, and sudden death. Arbuthnot.

2. Perspiring; emitting perspiration. Not proper.

Hair cometh not upon the palms of the hands or soles of the feet, which are parts more perspirable: and children are not hairy, for that their skins are most perspirable. Bacon.

That this attraction is performed by effluvia, is plain and granted by most; for electricities will not commonly attract, unless they become perspirable. Brown.

PERSPIRATION. n. s. [from perspire.] Excretion by the cuticular pores.

Insensible perspiration is the last and most perfect action of animal digestion. Arbuthnot.

PERSPIRATIVE. adj. [from perspire.] Performing the act of perspiration.

TO PERSPIRE. v. n. [from perspire, Latin.]

1. To perform excretion by the cuticular pores.

TO PERSTRINGE. v. a. [from perstringo, Lat.] To graze upon; to glance upon. Dict.

PERSUADABLE. adj. [from persuade.] Such as may be persuaded.

TO PERSUADE. v. a. [from persuadeo, Latin; persuader, Fr.]

1. To bring to any particular opinion.

Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. Romans.
We are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation. Hebrews.
Joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Thoms.

Let a man be ever so well persuaded of the advantages of virtue, yet, till he hangs and thirsts after righteousness, his will will not be determined to any action in pursuit of this confessed great good. Locke.

Men should seriously persuade themselves, that they have here no abiding place, but are only in their passage to the heavenly Jerusalem. Wake.

2. To influence by argument or expostulation. Persuasion seems rather applicable to the passions, and argument to the reason: but this is not always observed.

Philoclea's beauty not only persuaded, but so persuaded as all hearts must yield: Pamela's beauty used violence, and such as no heart could resist. Sidney.

They that were with Simon, being led with covetousness, were persuaded for money. 2 Maccabees.
To fit cross-leg'd or with our fingers postulated, is accounted bad, and friends will persuade us from it. Brown.

How incongruous would it be for a mathematician to persuade with eloquence to use all imaginable inductions and intricacies that he might prevail with his hearers to believe that three and three make six. Wilkins.

I should be glad, if I could persuade him to write such another criticism on any thing of mine; for when he condemns any of my poems, he makes the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

3. To inculcate by argument or expostulation.

To children, afraid of vain images, we persuade confidence by making them handle and look nearer such things. Taylor.

4. To treat by persuasion. A mode of speech not in use.

Twenty merchants have all persuaded with him; but none can drive him from the curious plea of forfeiture. Shakspeare.

PERSUADER. n. s. [from persuade.] One who influences by persuasion; an importunate adviser.

The earl, speaking in that imperious language wherein the king had written, did not irritate the people, but make them conceive, by the haughtiness of delivery of the king's errand, that himself was the author or principal persuader of that counsel. Bacon.

He soon is mov'd
By such persuaders as are held upright. Daniel.
Hunger and thirst at once,
Pow'ful persuaders! quicken'd at the scent
Of that alluring fruit, urg'd me so keen. Milton.

PERSUASIBLE. adj. [from persuadibilis, Lat. persuabile, Fr. from persuadeo, Lat.] To be influenced by persuasion.

It makes us apprehend our own interest in that obedience, makes us tractable and persuadible, contrary to that brutish stubbornness of the horse and mule, which the psalmist reproaches.

Government of the Tongue.

PERSUASIBLENESS. n. s. [from persuadibilis.] The quality of being flexible by persuasion.

PERSUASION. n. s. [from persuasion, Fr. from persuadus, Lat.]

1. The act of persuading; the act of influencing by expostulation; the act of gaining or attempting the passions.

If't prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
For thou hast all the arts of fine persuasion,
Trust me, and let me know thy love's success. Orney.

2. The state of being persuaded; opinion.

The most certain token of evident goodness is, if the general persuasion of all men does so account it. Hooker.

You are abus'd in too bold a persuasion. Shakspeare.
When we have no other certainty of being in the right, but our own persuasions that we are so; this may often be but making one error the gate for another. Government of the Tongue.

The obedient and the men of persuasion shall ride upon those clouds, and triumph over their present imperfections; till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance, and all come at length to be completed in the beatific vision. South.

PERSUASIVE. adj. [from persuassus, Fr. from persuade.] Having the power of persuading; having influence on the passions.

In prayer, we do not so much respect what precepts are delivereth, touching the method of persuasive utterance in the presence of great men, as what doth most avail to our own edification in piety and godly zeal. Hooker.

Let Martinus resume his farther discourse, as well for the persuasive as for the consult, touching the means that may conduce unto the enterprises. Bacon.

Notwithstanding the weight and fineness of the arguments to persuade, and the light of man's intellect to meet this persuasive evidence with a suitable assent, no assent followed, nor were men thereby actually persuaded. South.

PERSUASIVELY. adv. [from persuasive.]

In such a manner as to persuade.

The serpent with me
Persuasively hath to prevail'd, that I Have also yielded. Milton.

2. Hole made by punching or piercing.

An empty pot, without earth in it, may be put over a fruit the better, if some few pertusions be made in the pot. Bacon.

To PERVADE. v. a. [pervado, Lat.]

1. To pass through an aperture; to permeate.

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores In all the artful perforated shores. Blackmore.

Paper dipped in water or oil, the oculus mundi stone steeped in water, linen-cloth oiled or varnished, and many other substances soaked in such liquors as will ultimately pervade their little pores, become by that means more transparent than otherwise. Newton.

2. To pass through the whole extension.

Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be struck by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and pervade it. Bentley.

What but God, Pervades, adjusts and pervades the whole? Thomson.

PERVASION. n. f. [from pervade.] The act of pervading or passing through.

If fusion be made rather by the ingress and transference of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire heats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted: both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to salt-petre, will appear to be caused by the pervasion of a foreign body. Boyle.

PERVERSE. adj. [pervers, Fr. perversus, Latin.]

1. Distorted from the right.

And nature breeds Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things.

Obstinate in the wrong; stubborn; untractable.

Thou for the testimony of the truth hast born Universal reproach; far worse to bear Than violence; for this was all thy care To stand approv'd in sight of God, though world, Judg'd thee perverse. Milton.

To perverse a sex all grace is vain, It gives them courage to offend again. Dryden.

3. Petulant; vexatious; peevish; desirous to cross and vex; cross.

O gentle Romeo, If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully, Or if you think I am too quickly won, I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay, So thou wilt woo: but else not for the world. Shakespeare.

PERVERSELY. adv. [from perverse.] With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously, spitefully; crossly; with petty malignity.

Men *perverse*ly take up pickets and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate. Decey of Pity.

Men that do not *perverse*ly use their words, or on purpose set themselves to cavil, seldom mistake the signification of the names of simple ideas. Locke.

A patriot is a dangerous post, When wanted by his country most, *Perverse*ly comes in evil times, Where virtues are imputed crimes. Swift.

PERVERSENESS. n. f. [from perverse.]

1. Petulance; peevishness; spiteful crossness.

Virtue hath some *perverse*ness; for she will Neither believe her good, nor others ill. Donne.

Her whom he wishes null, shall seldom gain Though her *perverse*ness; but shall see her gain'd By a far worse. Milton.

The *perverse*ness of my fate is such, That he's not mine, because he's mine too much. Dryden.

When a friend in kindness tries To shew you where your error lies, Conviction does but more incense; *Perverse*ness is your whole defence. Swift.

2. Perversion; corruption. Not in use.

Neither can this be meant of evil governments or tyrants; for they are often established as lawful potentates; but of some *perverse*ness and defection in the nation itself. Bacon.

PERVERSION. n. f. [perverse, Fr. from perverse.] The act of perverting; change to something worse.

Women to govern men, slaves freemen, as much in the same degree; all being total violations and perversions of the laws of nature and nations. Bacon.

He supposes that whole reverend body are so far from disliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would be an effectual incentive to their perversion. Swift.

PERVERTSITY. n. f. [pervertit, Fr. from perverse.] Perverseness; crossness.

What strange pervertsity is this of man! When 'twas a crime to taste th' enlightning tree, He could not then his hand refrain. Nor.

To PERVERT. v. a. [pervertio, Lat. pervertir, Fr.]

1. To distort from the true end or purpose.

Instead of good they may work ill, and pervert justice to extreme injustice. Spenser.

If thou feelst the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of justice in a province, rear up not. Ecclesiastes.

If then his providence Out of our evil seek to bring forth good, Our labour must be to pervert that end, And out of good still to find means of evil. Milton.

He has perverted my meaning by his glosses; and interpreted my words into blasphemy, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

Perjury has more a volume to explain this case of the nymphs with more piety than judgment; and another person has perverted it into obsecration; and both allegorically. Brown.

We cannot charge any thing upon their nature, till we take care that it is perverted by their education. Law.

1. To corrupt; to turn from the right: opposed to convert, which is to turn from the wrong to the right.

PET. n. f. [This word is of doubtful etymology; from petit, Fr. or impetus, Lat. perhaps it may be derived some way from petr, as it implies only a little fume or heat.]

1. A slight passion; a slight fit of peevishness.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink theless stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
Th' All-giver would be unthank'd, would be unprais'd.

If we cannot obtain every vain thing we ask, our next best bet is to take pet at the refusal. L'Estr.
Life, given for noble purposes, must not be thrown up in a pet, nor whined away in love. Collier.
They cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the peevy in a pet to pray. Pope.

2. A lamb taken into the house, and brought up by hand. A caud lamb. [Probably from petit, little.] See PRAT. Hanmer.

PETAL. n. f. [petalum, Latin.]
Petal is a term in botany, signifying those fine coloured leaves that compose the flowers of all plants; whence plants are distinguished into monopetalous, whose flower is one continued leaf; tripe-talous, pentapetalous, and polypetalous, when they consist of three, five, or many leaves. Quincy.

PETALOUS. adj. [from petal.] Having petals.

PETAR. } n. f. [petard, French; petardo, PETARD. } Italian.

A petard is an engine of metal, almost in the shape of a hat, about seven inches deep, and about five inches over at the mouth; when charged with fine powder well beaten, it is covered with a madrier or plank, bound down fast with ropes, running through handles, which are round the rim near the mouth of it: this petard is applied to gates or burriets of such places as are designed to be surprized, to blow them up: they are also used in counter-mines to break through into the enemies' galleries.

It is the spot to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard. Shakespeare.
Find all his having and his holdings,
Reduce'd to eternal noise and scolding;
The conjugal petard that tears
Down all portcullises of ears. Hudibras.

a vanishing notion? South.

PETITION. n. f. [petitio, Latin.]

1. Request; entreaty; supplication; prayer.
We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident and very material in causes of this nature.

My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women. Shakespeare.
Let my life be given at my petition, and my people at my request. Lyther.

Thou didst choose this house to be called by thy name, and to be a house of prayer and petition for thy people. 1 Macabees.

We must not only send up petitions and thoughts new and then to heaven, but must go through all our worldly business with a heavenly spirit. Law.

2. Single branch or article of a prayer.

Then petit'd that she might still possess his heart,
And no prebending rival share a part;

This last petition heard of all her pray'r. Dryden.

in themselves impotent, and stand in need of relief from others. Hooker.

I return only yes or no to questionary and petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Swift.

PETITIONER. n. f. [from petition.] One who offers a petition.

When you have received the petitions, and it will please the petitioners well to deliver them into your own hand, let your secretary first read them, and draw lines under the material parts. Bacon.

What pleasure can it be to be encumbered with dependencies, thronged and surrounded with petitioners? South.

Their prayers are to the reproach of the petitioners, and to the confusion of vain desires. L'Estrange.

His woes broke out, and begg'd relief

With tears, the dumb petitioners of grief. Dryden.

The Roman matrons presented a petition to the sensors; this raised to much rillery upon the petitioners, that the ladies never after offered to direct the lawgivers of their country. Addison.

PETITORY. adj. [petitorius, Lat. petitiore, Fr.] Petitoning; claiming the property of any thing. Ainsworth.

PETRE. n. f. [from petra, a stone.] Nitre; saltpetre. See NITRE.

Powder made of insipid and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report.

The vessel was first well sealed to prevent cracking, and covered to prevent the falling in of any thing that might unseasonably kindle the petre.

Nitre, while it is in its native state, is called petre-salt, when refined salt-petre. Woodward.

PETRESCENT. adj. [petrescens, Lat.] Growing stone; becoming stone.

A cave, from whose arched roof there dropped down a petrescent liquor, which oftentimes before it could fall to the ground congealed. Boyle.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [from petrifico, Lat.]

1. The act of turning to stone; the state of being turned to stone.

Its concretive spirit has the seeds of petrification and gorgon within itself. Brown.

2. That which is made into stone.

Look over the variety of beautiful shells, petrifications, ores, minerals, flowers, and other natural curiosities. Chey.

PETRIFICATION. adj. [from petrificio, Lat.]

Having the power to form stone.

There are many to be found, which are but the lapidescences and petrification mutation of bodies.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [petrification, Fr.
from petrify.] A body formed by changing other matter to stone.

In these strange petrifications, the hardening of the bodies seems to be effected principally, if not only, as in the induration of the fluid substances of an egg into a chick, by altering the disposition of their parts. Boyle.

PETRIFICK. adj. [petrificus, Lat.] Having the power to change to stone.

Winter's breath,
A nitrous blast that strikes petrifik death. Savage.

The aggregated soil
Death with his mace petrifik, cold and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton.

TO PETRIFY. v. a. [petrifer, Fr. petra and to, Latin.]

1. To change to stone.

A few reliable petrified wood. Woodward.

2. To make callous; to make obtuse.

Sedition is made but by the effects to the liberty, in a kind of petrifying state, which induces induration. Decay of Pleas.

Though their souls be not yet wholly petrified, yet every act of sin makes gradual approaches to it.

Full in the midst of Edicid dip at once,
And petrify a genius to a dunce. Pope.

Who sile nature, and substat on art,
Who coin the face, and petrify the heart. Young.

TO PETRIFY. v. a. To become stone.

Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief. Dryden.

PETRO'L. } n. f. [petrole, Fr.] A li-PETRO'LEUM. } quid bitumen, black,

floating on the water of springs. Woodward.

PETRONEL. n. f. [petrinal, Fr.] A pistol;
a small gun used by a horseman.

And he with petronel upheav'd,
Instead of shield the blow receiv'd,
The gun recoil'd as well it might. Hudibras.

PETTCOY. n. f. [gnaphalium minus.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PETTICOAT. n. f. [petit and coat.] The lower part of a woman's dress.

What trade art thou, Feeble?—A woman's taylor, sir.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat? Shakespeare.

Her feet beneath her petticoat,
Like little mice, stole in and out,
As if they fear'd the light. Swifling.

It is a great compliment to the sex, that the virtues are generally shown in petticoats. Addison.

To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
We trust the important charge, the petticoat;

Oh have we known that sevenfold fence to fail, Though still with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale. Pope.

PETTIFOGGER. n. f. [corrupted from pettifoguer; petit and voguer, Fr.] A petty small-rate lawyer.

The worst conditioned and least cliented pettifoggers get, under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew.

Your pettifoggers damn their souls
To share with knaves in cheating souls. Hudibras.

Consider, my dear, how indecent it is to abandon your shop and follow pettifoggers; there is hardly a plea between two country squires about a barren acre, but you draw yourself in as bail, surety, or solicitor. Arbutnot.

Physicians are apt to despise empirics; lawyers,
pettifoggers; and merchants, pedlars. Swift.

PETTINESS. n. f. [from petty.] Smallness; littleness; inconsiderableness; unimport-tance.

The losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, and the disgrace we have digested;
To answer which, his pettiness would bow under.

PETTISH. adj. [from pet.] Fretful; peevish.

Nor doth their childhood prove their innocence;
They're froward, pettish, and unus'd to smile.

PETTISHNESS. n. f. [from pettish.] Fret-fulness; peevishness.

Like children, when we lose our favourite plaything, we throw away the rest in a fit of pettishness.

PETTITORS. n. f. [petty and toe.]

1. The feet of a sucking pig.

2. Feet in contempt.

My good clown grew so in love with the wencher fool, that he would not stir his pettitors, till he had both taste and words. Shakespeare.

PETTO. n. f. [Italian.] The breast; figuratively, privacy.

PETTY. adj. [petit, Fr.] Small; inoonsiderable; inferior; little.

When he had no power,
But was a petty sovereign to the state,
He was your enemy. Shakespeare.

It is a common experience, that dogs know the dog-baiter; when, up in time of infection, some petty fellow is sent out to kill the dogs. Bacon.
 It importeth not much, some petty alteration of difference it may make. Bacon.

Will God excuse his ire
 For such a petty trespass? Milton.

From thence a thousand lesser poets sprung,
 Like petty princes from the fall of Rome. Denham.
 They believe one only chief and great God, which hath been from all eternity; who, when he proposed to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order; and after, the sun, moon, and stars, as petty gods. Stillingfleet.

By all I have read of petty commonwealths, as well as the great ones, it seems to me, that a free people do of themselves divide into three powers. Swift.

Bolonia water'd by the petty Rhine. Addison.
 Can an example be given, in the whole course of this war, where we have treated the pettiest prince, with whom we have had to deal, in so contemptuous a manner? Swift.

PETULANCE. n. f. [petulance, Fr. petulantia, Lat.] Sauciness; peevishness; wantonness.

It was excellently said of that philosopher, that there was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulancy of our words. Ben Jonson.
 Such was others petulancy, that they joyed to see their betters shamefully outraged and abused. A. C.

Wise men knew, that which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off. Clarendon.

However their numbers, as well as their influence and perverseness increased, many influences of petulancy and fury are to be seen in their pamphlets. Swift.

There appears in our age a pride and petulancy in youth, zealous to cast off the restraint of their fathers and teachers. Watts.

PETULANT. adj. [petulans, Lat. petulant, French.]

1. Saucy; perverse.

It the opponent flies victory to incline to his side, let him show the force of his argument, without too importunate and petulant demands of an answer. Watts.

2. Wanton.

The tongue of a man is so petulant, and his thoughts so variable, that one oft findeth by too great stress upon any private speeches and opinions. Spenser.

PETULANTLY. adv. [from petulant.]

With petulance; with saucy pertness.

PEW. n. f. [puge, Dutch.] A seat enclosed in a church.

When Sir Thomas More was lord chancellor, he did sit, at morn, to sit in the chancel, and his lady in a pew. Bacon.

Should our sex take it into their heads to wear trunk breeches at church, a man and his wife would fill a whole pew. Addison.

She decently, in form, pays heav'n's due;
 And makes a civil visit to her pew. Young.

PEWET. n. f. [piewit, Dutch; vannellus.]

1. A water fowl.

We reckon the dip-click, so named of his diving and sinkings, puffins, pewets, meawes. Carcus.

2. The lapwing. Ainsworth.

PEWTER. n. f. [peauter, Dutch.]

1. A compound of metals; an artificial metal.

Nine parts or more of tin, with one of regulus of antimony, compose pewter. Pemberton.

Cowle pewter is made of fine tin and lead. Bacon.
 The pewter, into which no water could enter, became more white, and liker to silver, and less fusible. Bacon.

Pewter dishes, with water in them, will not melt easily, but without it they will; nay, butter or oil, in themselves inflammable, yet, by their nature, will hinder melting. Bacon.

2. The plates and dishes in a house.

The eye of the mistress was wont to make her pewter shine. Addison.

PEWTERER. n. f. [from pewter.] A smith who works in pewter.

He shall charge you and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer. Shakespeare.

We caused a skilful pewterer to close the vessel in our presence with solder exquisitely. Boyle.

PHENOMENON. n. f. See PHENOMENON.

This has sometimes phenomena in the plural.] [φαινόμενον.] An appearance in the works of nature.

The paper was black, and the colours intense and thick, that the phenomenon might be conspicuous. Newton.

PHAGEDENIA. n. f. [φαιδαία; from φαγε, to eat.] An ulcer, where the sharpness of the humours eats away the flesh.

PHAGEDENICK. adj. [phagedenique.]

PHAGEDENOUS. French] Eating; corroding.

Phagedenick medicines, are those which eat away fungous or proud flesh. Diet.

A bubo, according to its malignancy, either proves easily curable, or terminates in a phagedenous ulcer with jagged lips. Weyman.

When they are very painful and corrosive, which circumstances give them the name of foul phagedenick ulcers, some spirits of wine should be added to the fomentation. Sharp.

PHALANG. n. f. [phalang, Latin; phalange, French.] A troop of men closely embodied.

Far otherwise th' inviolable saints,
 In cubic phalang firm, advanc'd entire,
 Invulnerable, impetuously arm'd. Milton.

The Grecian phalang, moveless as a tow'r,
 On all sides batter'd, yet resists his power. Pope.

PHANTASIA. n. f. [φάντασμα, phantasia.]

PHANTASMA. phantasmic, phantastic, French.] Vain and airy appearance; something appearing only to imagination.

All the internis is like a phantasia or a hideous dream. Shaksp.

The Venus is a Spaniard that keeps here in court a phantasia, a monarch, and one that makes sport for the prince and his book-makers. Shakspere.

They believe, as they believe amiss, because they believe phantasia or apparitions. Raleigh.

It is said that some were in forwardness, the people were so busy, entertaining this airy body or phantasia with incredible affection; partly out of their great devotion to the house of York, partly out of proud humour. Bacon.

Why.
 In this infernal vale first met, then call'd it
 Me father, and that phantasm call'd it my son. Milt.

Allying, by his devilish art, to reach
 The organs of her fancy, and with them forge Illusions, as he list, phantasies and dreams. Milton.

PHANTASTICAL. See FANTASTICAL.

PHANTASTICK.

PHANTOM. n. f. [phantome, French.]

1. A spectre; an apparition.

If he cannot help believing, that such things he saw and heard, he may still have room to believe that what this airy phantom said is not absolutely to be relied on. Atterbury.

A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
 Strange phantoms rising as the justs write;
 Dreadful as hermits dreams, in haunted shades,
 Or bright as visions of exalted souls. Pope.

2. A fancied vision.

Restless and impatient to try every overture of present happiness, he hunts a phantom he can never overtake. Rogers.

As Pallas will'd along, the sable skies,
 To cull the queen, the phantom sister flies. Pope.

PHARISAEICAL. adj. [from pharisee.] Ritual; externally religious; from the sect of the Pharisees, whose religion consisted almost wholly in ceremonies.

The causes of superstition are pleading and sensual rites, exerts of outward and pharisaical holiness, over-great reverence of traditions which cannot but lose the church. Bacon.

Shall we not be deluded with pharisaical wallings instead of christian testimony. Shakspere.

PHARMACEUTICAL. adj. [φάρμακον, pharmakon.]

PHARMACEUTICK. adj. [φάρμακον, pharmakon.] Relating to the knowledge or art of pharmacy, and preparation of medicines.

PHARMACOLOGIST. n. f. [φάρμακος and λόγος.] One who writes upon drugs.

The uterocula is recommended by the pharmacologists as an absorbent and conglutinator of broken bones. Woodward on Fossils.

PHARMACOLOGY. n. f. [φάρμακος and λογία.] The knowledge of drugs and medicines.

PHARMACOPOEIA. n. f. [φάρμακος and ποιία; pharmacopoe, French.] A dispensatory; a book containing rules for the composition of medicines.

PHARMACY. n. f. [from φάρμακος, a medicine; pharmacie, French.] The art or practice of preparing medicines; the trade of an apothecary.

Each dose the goddess weighs with watchful eye,
 So nice her art in impious pharmacy. Gorth.

PHAROS. n. f. [from Pharos in Egypt.]

PHARE. French] A lighthouse; a lantern from the shore to direct sailors.

He augmented and repaired the port of Ostia, built a pharos or light-house. Arduotus on Coena.

PHARYNGOTOMY. n. f. [φάρυγξ and τομή.] The act of making an incision into the windpipe, used when some tumour in the throat hinders respiration.

PHASEIS. n. f. [phaseli, Lat.] French-beans.

PHASIS. n. f. In the plural phasies. [φάσις, phasie, French.] Appearance exhibited by any body; as the changes of the moon.

All the hypotheses yet contrived, were built upon too narrow an inspection of the phases of the universe. Clavelle.

He o'er the seas shall love or some parcel;
 And other mouths, another phasis view;
 Fixt to the rudder, he shall boldly steer,
 And pass those rocks which Tiphys us'd to fear. Cressh.

PHASM. n. f. [φάσμα.] Appearance; phantom; fancied apparition.

Thence proceed many aerial actions and phasms, and chymisms created by the vanity of our own hearts or seduction of evil spirits, and not planted in them by God. Hommond.

PHASANT. n. f. [faisan, French; phasianus, from Phasis, the river of Colchis.] A kind of wild cock.

The hardest to draw are tame birds; as the cock, peacock, and pheasant. Peacham on Drawing.

French as I please, I doubt our serious men
 Will chase a pheasant still before a hen. Pope.

PHIER. n. f. A companion. See FEER.

TO PHEESE. v. a. [perhaps to freeze.] To comb; to fleece; to curry.

As he be proud with me, I'll pheece his pride. Shakspere.

PHENICOPTER. n. f. [φαινικόπτερος; phainicopterus, Latin.] A kind of bird, which is thus described by Martial:

Dat mihi penna rubens nonne sed lingua
 gulyis gulyis

Nontra sapit; quid si garrula lingua foret?
 He blended together the livers of gullies, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phainicopter, and the tails of lamprids. Huacull.

PHENIX. n. f. [phénix; phénix, Latin.] The bird which is supposed to exist single, and to rise again from its own ashes.

There is one tree, the phoenix throne; one phoenix
At this hour reigning there. Shakespeare.
To all the world he seems a phoenix. Milton.
Having the idea of a phoenix in my mind, the first enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? Locke.

PHENOMENON. n. f. [phainomenon; phenomene, French: it is therefore often written phænomenon; but being naturalised, it has changed the æ, which is not in the English language, to e. But if it has the original plural termination phænomena, it should, I think, be written with a.]

1. Appearance; visible quality.

Short-sighted minds are unfit to make philosophers, whose business it is to describe, in comprehensive theories, the phenomena of the world and their causes. Burnet.

There are curiosities of little or no moment to the understanding the phenomenon of nature. Newton.

The most considerable phenomenon, belonging to terrestrial bodies, is gravitation, whereby all bodies in the vicinity of the earth press towards its centre. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any thing that strikes by any new appearance.

PHIAL. n. f. [phiala, Latin; phiole, Fr.] A small bottle.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole
With juice of cursed hebenon in a phial. Shakspeare.
He proves his explications by experiments made with a phial of water, and with globes of glass filled with water. Newton.

PHILANTHROPY. n. f. [philw and anthropos.] Love of mankind; good-nature.

Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison.

PHILIPPICK. n. f. [from the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon.] Any invective declamation.

PHILOLOGER. n. f. [philologos.] One whose chief study is language; a grammarian; a critic.

Philologers and critical discourses, who look beyond the shell and obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry with our narrower explorations. Brown.
You expect, that I should discourse of this matter like a naturalist, not a philologer. Stayle.
The best philologers say, that the original word does not only signify domestic, as opposed to foreign, but also private, as opposed to common. Spratt's Sermons.

PHILOLOGICAL. adj. [from philology.] Critical; grammatical.

Studies, called philological, are history, language, grammar, rhetoric, poetry, and criticism. Watts.
He who pretends to the learned professions, if he doth not arise to be a critic himself in philological matters, should frequently converse with dictionaries, paraphrases, commentators, or other critics, which may relieve any difficulties. Watts.

PHILOLOGIST. n. f. See PHILOLOGER. A critic; a grammarian.

PHILOLOGY. n. f. [philologia; philologie, French.] Criticism; grammatical learning.

Temper all discourses of philology with interpositions of morality. Walker.

PHILOMEL. n. f. [from Philomela, changed into a bird.] The nightingale.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold,
And Philomel becomes a dove. Shakspeare.

Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings? Pope.
PHILOMOT. adj. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf.] Coloured like a dead leaf.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and another philomot; the fourth was of a pink colour, and the fifth of a pale green. Addison.

PHILOSOPHEME. n. f. [philosophema.] Principle of reasoning; theorem. An unusual word.

You will learn how to address yourself to children for their benefit, and derive some useful philosophemes for your own entertainment. Watts.

PHILOSOPHER. n. f. [philosophus, Latin; philosophe, French.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

Many found in belief have been also great philosophers. Hooker.

The philosopher hath long ago told us, that according to the divers natures of things, so must the evidences for them be; and that 'tis an argument of an undisciplined wit not to acknowledge this. Wilkins.

They all our fan'd philosophers despise,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryden.

If the philosophers by fire had been so wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers, ought to have been, our acquaintance with the bodies here about us had been yet much greater. Locke.

Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the natures of things upon their names; he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

PHILOSOPHERS stone. n. f. A stone dreamed of by alchymists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

That stone
Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton.
PHILOSOPHICK. } adj. [philosophique,
PHILOSOPHICAL. } French; from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:
The stoick last in philosophick pride
By him call'd virtue, and his virtuous man,
Wife, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.
How could our chymick friends go on
To find the philosophick stone? Prior.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and caulets. Shakspeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasoning about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will content in philosophick fare,
I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonwealths that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally paineth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passions of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or described upon the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Lockyer.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be altered; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not found any philosophical notion of the worth of men, than

To PHILOSOPHIZE. v. a. [philosophize, French.] To play the philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to inquire into the causes of effects.

Qualities occur to Aristotle, such as to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glenville.

The wax philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning made the brick so hard, cast life into the fire. L'Estrange.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHY. n. f. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge natural or moral.

I had never read, heard, nor seen any thing, I had never any taste of philosophy nor inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my remembrance. Sidney.

Hang up philosophy;
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not. Shakspeare.

The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Digby.

2. Hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy, and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Reasoning; argumentation.

Of good and evil much they argue'd then,
Vain wisdom all and false philosophy. Milton.
His decisions are the judgment of his passions not of his reason, the philosophy of the finner not of the man. Rogers.

4. The course of sciences read in the schools.

PHILTRE. n. f. [philtre, French.] Something to cause love.

The melting kiss that tips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleland.
This cup a cure for both our ills has brought,
You need not fear a philtre in the draught. Dryden.
A philtre that has neither drug nor enchantment in it, love if you would raise love. Addison.

To PHILTRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To charm to love.

Let not those that have repudiated the more inviting sins, shew themselves philtred and bewitched by this. Government of the Tongue.

PHIZ. s. f. [This word is formed by a ridiculous contraction from physiognomy, and should therefore, if it be written at all, be written phiz.] The face, in a sense of contempt.

His air was too proud, and his features amish,
As if being a traitor had alter'd his phiz. Stepney.

PHLEBOTOMIST. n. f. [phlebotomiste, Fr. from phlé and tomein.] One that opens a vein; a blood-letter.

To PHLEBOTOMIZE. v. a. [phlebotomiser, French; from phlebotomy.] To let blood.

The first bodies of men must have an evacuation for their humours, and be phlebotomized. Hewel.

PHLEBOTOMY. n. f. [phlebotomia, phlé, phlé, vena, and tomein; phlebotomic, French.] Blood-letting; the act or practice of opening a vein for medical intentions.

Phlebotomy is not such a trifling matter; the blood so flowing in veins keeps all veins. Hewel.
Although in the phlebotomy of the liver or spleen, considerations are made in phlebotomy to their size

tion, yet, when the heart is affected, it is thought as essential to bleed on the right as the left. Brown.
Pains for the spending of the spirits, come nearest to the copious and swift loss of spirits by phlebotomy. Harvey.

PHLEGM. n. f. [φλέγμα; phlegm, Fr.]
1. The watery humour of the body, which, when it predominates, is supposed to produce sluggishness or dulness.

Make the proper use of each extreme,
And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Rosc.
He who, supreme in judgment as in wit,
Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire;
His precepts teach but what his works inspire.
Our critics take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.

Let melancholy rule supreme,
Choler preside, or blood or phlegm,
It makes no difference in the case,
Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water, among chymists.
A linen cloth, dipped in common spirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, because the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PHLEGMAGOGUE. n. f. [φλέγμα and ἄγω; phlegmagogue, French.] A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the stomachic ferment must be corrected, and phlegmagogues must evacuate it. Flayer.

PHLEGMATICK. adj. [φλεγματικός; phlegmaticque, French; from phlegm.]

1. Abounding in phlegm.
The putrid vapours, though exciting a fever, do coagulate the phlegmatic humours of the body. Harvey.

Chewing and smoking of tobacco is only proper for phlegmatic people. Arbutnot.
2. Generating phlegm.

A neat's foot, I fear, is too phlegmatick a meat. Shakespeare.

Negroes, transplanted into cold and phlegmatick habitations, continue their hue in themselves and generations. Brown.

3. Watery.

Urban; wherein Mary Magdalen is pictured before our Saviour waiting his feet on her knees, which will not confute with the first letter of the text. Hutton.

Love is like the painter, who, being to draw the picture of a friend having a blemish in one eye, would picture only this other side of his face. South.

2. To represent.

All filled with these rufled spectacles of so many wretched careleses harping, that even I, that do but hear it from you, and do picture it in my mind, do greatly pity it. Spenser.

See here thy pictur'd life. Thomson.

To PIDDLE, v. n. [This word is obscure in its etymology; Skinner derives it from picciolo, Italian; or petit, French, little;

Lye thinks the diminutive of the Welsh bryda, to eat; perhaps it comes from pidde, for Skinner gives, for its primitive signification, to deal in little things.]

1. To pick at table; to feed squeamishly, and without appetite.

From stomach sharp, and hearty feeding,
To piddle like a lily breeding. Swift.

PIKE. n. f. [picque, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The lute or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any fresh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years; and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy, and bold fish;

he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer: and his manner of breeding is

PIL

thus; a he and a she pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the spawning, casts her eggs, and the mother hovers over her all the time she is calling her spawn, but touches her not. Walton.

  - Shakespeare* seems to use it for a feather or quill of the wing.
He is pluck'd, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing. Shakespeare.
  - Wing.
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying purfivants. Spenser.
The God, who mounts the winged winds,
Fast to his feet the golden pinions binds,
That high through fields of air his flight sustain. Pope.
Though fear should lend him pinions like the wind,
Yet swifter fate will seize him from behind. Swift.
  - The tooth of a smaller wheel, answerable to that of a larger.
  - Fetters or bonds for the arms. Ainsworth.
- TO PINION. v. a. [from the noun.]
- To bind the wings.

P I N

Whereas they have sacrificed to themselves, they become sacrifices to the inconsistency of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned. Bacon.

2. To confine by binding the wings; to maim by cutting off the first joint of the wing.

3. To bind the arm to the body.
A second spear sent with equal force,
His right arm pierc'd, and holding on, bereft
His use of both, and pinion'd down his left. Dryden.

4. To confine by binding the elbows to the sides.
Scarming at his back the country cry'd,
And seiz'd and pinion'd brought to court the knight. Dryden.

5. To shackle; to bind.
Know, that I will not wait pinion'd at your master's court; rather make my country's high pyramids my gibbet, and hang me up in chains. Shakespeare.

You are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinion'd. Shakespeare.
O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
Avaunt, entangled, hamper'd thing. Herbert.

In vain from chains and fetters free,
The great man boasts of liberty;
He's pinion'd up by formal rules of state. North.

6. To bind to. This is not proper.
So by each bard an alderman shall sit,
At every lord shall hang at every wit;
And while on fame's triumphant ear they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side. Pope.

7. A small fragrant flower of the gilliflower kind.
In May and June come pinks of all sorts; especially the bluish pink. Bacon.

8. An eye; commonly a small eye: as, pink-eyed.
Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plump Bacchus, with pink eyes,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakespeare.

9. Any thing supremely excellent. I know not whether from the flower or the eye, or a corruption of pinacle.
I am the very pink of courtesy. Shakespeare.

10. The pink of puppies in some future firm. Young.
The pink of puppies in some future firm.
The pink of puppies in some future firm. Young.

11. A colour used by painters.
Pink is very susceptible of the other colours by the mixture; if you mix brown-red with it, you will make it a very earthy colour. Dryden.

12. [pinque, Fr.] A kind of heavy narrow-sterned ship.
This pink is one of Cupid's carriers;
Give fire, she is my prize. Shakespeare.

13. A fish; the minnow. Ainsworth.
To PINK, v. a. [from pink, Dut. an eye.]
To work in eyelet holes; to pierce in small holes.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me,
All her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shaksf.
The sea-hedgehog is enclosed in a round shell,
Handsomely wrought and pink'd. Carew.

Happy the climate, where the beau
Wears the same suit for use and show;
And at a small expence your wife,
If once well pink'd, is cloath'd for life. Prior.

To PINK, v. n. [pincken, Dutch; from the noun.] To wink with the eyes.
A hungry fox lay winking and pinking, as if he had fore eyes. LeStrange.

PINMAKER, n. f. [pin and maker.] He who makes pins.

PINMONEY, n. f. [pin and money.] Money

P I O

allowed to a wife for her private expences without account.
The woman must find out something else to mortgage, when her pinmoney is gone. Addison.

PINNACE, n. f. [pinnaffe, Fr. pinnacia, Ital. pinaca, Span.] A boat belonging to a ship of war. It seems formerly to have signified rather a small sloop or bark attending a larger ship.

Whist our pinnace anchors in the downs,
Here shall they make their ransom on the sand. Shakespeare.

For fear of the Turks great fleet, he came by night in a small pinnace to Rhodes. Knollys.
He cut down wood, and made a pinnace, and entered the South-sea. Milton.

I sent a pinnace or post of advice, to make a discovery of the coast, before I adventur'd my greater ship. Spelman.

This to ballast love,
I saw I had love's pinnace overtaken. Donne.
I discharged a bark, taken by one of my pinnaces, coming from cape Blanch. Raleigh.

A pinnace anchors in a craggy bay,
Swift as a swallow sweeps the liquid way,
The winged pinnace shot along the sea. Pope.

PINNACLE, n. f. [pinna, Fr. pinna, Lat.]

1. A turret or elevation above the rest of the building.
My letting some men go up to the pinnacle of the temple, was a temptation to them to call me down headlong. King Charles.

He who desires only heaven, laughs at that enchantment, which engages men to climb a tottering pinnacle, where the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Deacy of Picty.

He took up ship-money where Noy left it, and, being a judge, carried it up to that pinnacle, from whence he almost broke his neck. Clarendon.

Some metropolis
With glistering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

2. A high spiring point.
The slippery tops of human state,
The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.

PINNER, n. f. [from pinna, or pinion.]

1. The lappet of a head which flies loose.
Her goodly countenance I've seen,
Set off with kerchief starch'd, and pinners clean. Gay.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner of a night-rail, but will talk on the vitta. Addison.

2. A pinmaker. Ainsworth.

PINNOCK, n. f. [curruca.] The tomtit. Ainsworth.

PINT, n. f. [pint, Sax. pinte, Fr. pinta, low Lat.] Half a quart; in medicine, twelve ounces; a liquid measure.

Well, you'll not believe me generous, till I crack half a pint with you at my own charges. Dryden.

PISCES, n. f. In astronomy, the signs of an astrolabe. Dut.

PIONIER, n. f. [pionier, from pion, obsolete French; pion, according to Scaliger, comes from pco for pedito, a foot soldier, who was formerly employed in digging for the army. A pioneer is in Dutch, spagener, from spage, a spade; whence Junius imagines that the French borrowed spagener, which was afterward called pioneer.] One whose business is to level the road, throw up works, or sink mines in military operations.

Well said, old mole, can't work 't' ground to fast?
A worthy pioneer. Shakespeare.

Three try new experiments, such as themselves think good; these we call pioneers or miners. Bacon.

His pioneers
Even the paths, and make the highways plain. Fairfax.

Of labouring pioneers
A multitude with spades and axes arm'd,
To lay hills plain, fell woods or vallies fill. Milton.

The Romans, after the death of Tiberius, sent thither an army of pioneers to demolish the buildings, and despoil the beauties of the island. Addison.

P I P

PIONING, n. f. Works of pioneers. Spensf.

PIONY, n. f. [pionia, Latin.] A large flower. See PEONY.

PIOUS, adj. [pius, Latin; piety, French.]

1. Careful of the duties owed by created beings to God; godly; religious; such as is due to sacred things.
Pious awe that fear'd to have offended. Milton.

True patience, and to temper joy with fear
And pious sorrow. Milton.

2. Careful of the duties of near relation.
As he is not called a just father, that educates his children well, but pious, so that prince, who de-feats and well rules his people, is religious. Taylor.

Where was the martial brother's pious care?
Condemn'd perhaps some foreign shore to tread. Pope.

3. Practised under the appearance of religion.
I shall never gratify spitefulness with any sinister thoughts of all whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.

PIOUSLY, adv. [from pious.] In a pious manner; religiously; with such regard as is due to sacred things.

The prime act and evidence of the christian hope is, to set industriously and piously to the performance of that condition, on which the promise is made. Hammond.

See lion-hearted Richard, with his force
Drawn from the North, to Jury's hallow'd plains; Piously valiant. Philips.

This martial present piously design'd,
The loyal city give their best lov'd king. Dryden.

Let freedom never perish in your hands!
But piously transmit it to your children. Addison.

PIP, n. f. [pippe, Dut. pipie, Fr. deduced by Skinner from pituita; but probably coming from pippo or pipilo, on account of the complaining cry.]

1. A deflexion with which fowls are troubled; a horny pellicle that grows on the tip of their tongues.

When murrain reigns in hogs or sheep,
And chickens languish of the pip. Hudibras.

A spiteful venomous giply died of the pip. L'Estr.

2. A spot on the cards. I know not from what original, unless from pict, painting; in the country, the pictured or court cards are called pits.

When our women fill their imaginations with pips and counters, I cannot wonder at a new-born child, that was marked with the five of clubs. Addison.

To PIP, v. a. [pipia, Lat.] To chirp or cry as a bird.

It is no infrequent thing to hear the chick pip and cry in the egg, before the shell be broken. Boyle.

PIFF, n. f. [pib, Welch; pipe, Saxon.]

1. Any long hollow body; a tube.
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We post upon the morning, are taught
To give or to forgive; but when we're stiff'd
These piffes, and these convulsions of blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls. Shakespeare.

The part of the pipe, which was lowermost, will become higher; so that water ascends by descending. Wicks.

It has many springs breaking out of the sides of the hills, and vast quantities of wood to make pipes of. Addison.

An animal, the nearer it is to its original, the more pipes it hath, and as it advanceth in age still fewer. Arbutnot.

2. A tube of clay through which the fume of tobacco is drawn into the mouth.
Try the taking of fumes by pipes, as in tobacco and other things, to dry and consist. Bacon.

PIP

His ancient pipe in fable dy'd,
And half unfinish'd lay by his side.

My husband's a sot,
With his pipe and his pot.

3. An instrument of wind music.

I have known, when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the taber and the pipe.

The solemn pipe and dulcimer.

Then the shrill sound of a small rural pipe,

Was entertainment for the infant stage.

There is no reason, why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains.

4. The organs of voice and respiration: as, the wind-pipe.

The exercise of singing openeth the breast and pipes.

5. The key or sound of the voice.

My throat of war be turn'd.

Which quired with my drum, into a pipe

Small as an eunuch.

6. An office of the exchequer.

That office of her majesty's exchequer, we, by a metaphor, call the pipe, because the whole receipt is finally conveyed into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as water into a cistern.

7. [peep, Dut. pipe, Fr.] A liquid measure containing two hogheads.

I think I shall drink in pipe wine with Falstaff.

I'll make him dance.

To PIPE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play on the pipe.

Merry Michael the Cornish port piped thus upon his oaten pipe for merry England.

We have piped unto you, and you have not danced.

In singing, as in piping, you excel.

Gunning goats, and fleecy flocks,

And lowing herds, and piping swans,

Come dancing to me.

2. To have a thrill sound.

His big manly voice,

Turning again toward childlike treble, pipes

And whistles in his sound.

PIPER, n. f. [from pipe.] One who plays on the pipe.

Pipers and trumpeters shall be heard no more in thee.

PIPETREE, n. f. The lilach.

PRING, adj. [from pipe. This word is only used in low language.]

1. Weak; feeble; sickly; from the weak voice of the fiek.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,

Have no delight to pass away the time,

Unless to spy my shadow in the sun.

2. Hot; boiling; from the sound of any thing that boils.

PIPKIN, n. f. [diminutive of pipe, a large vessel.] A small earthen boiler.

A pipkin there like Homer's tripod walks.

Some officer might give content

To a large cover'd pipkin in his tent.

PIPPIN, n. f. [puppynghe, Dut. Skinner.] A sharp apple.

Pippins take their name from the small spots or pipe that usually appear on the sides of them: some are called stone pippins from their obduracy; some Kentish pippins, because they agree well with that soil; others French pippins, having their original from France, which is the best bearer of any of these pippins; the Holland pippin and the russet pippin, from its russet hue; but such as are distinguished by the names of grey and white pippins are of equal goodness: they are generally a very pleasant fruit and of good juice, but tender bearers.

You shall see mine or him, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting.

Entertain yourself with a pippin roasted Harvey.

The pippin-woman, I look upon as fabulous.

His foaming talks let some large pippin grace,

So 'midst their thund'ring spears an orange place.

PIE

This pippin shall another trial make;
See from the core two kernels brown I take.

PIQUANCY, n. f. [from piquant.] Sharpness; tartness.

PIQUANT, adj. [piquant, French.]

1. Pricking; piercing; stimulating to the taste.

There are vast mountains of a transparent rock extremely solid, and as piquant to the tongue as salt.

2. Sharp; tart; pungent; severe.

Some think their wits adreep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick: that is a vein that would be bridled; and men ought to find the difference between saltiness and bitterness.

Men make their railleries as piquant as they can to wound the deeper.

PIQUANTLY, adv. [from piquant.] Sharply; tartly.

A small mistake may leave upon the mind the lasting memory of having been piquantly, though wittily taunted.

PIQUE, n. f. [pique, French.]

1. An ill will; an offence taken; petty malice.

He had never any the least pique, difference or jealousy with the King his father.

Men take up piques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate.

Out of a personal pique to those in service, he stands as a looker-on, when the government is attacked.

2. A strong passion.

Though he have the pique, and long,

'Tis still for something in the wrong;

As women long, when they're with child,

For things extravagant and wild.

3. Point; nicety; punctilio.

Add long prescription of establish'd laws,

And pique of honour to maintain a cause,

And shame of change.

To PIQUE, v. a. [piquer, French.]

1. To touch with envy or virulence; to put into fret; to kindle to emulation.

Piqu'd by Protogenes's fame,

From Co to Rhodes Apelles came,

To see a rival and a friend,

Piqued to censure or commend.

2. To offend; to irritate.

Why pique all mortals, that affect a name?

A fool to pleasure, yet a slave to fame!

The lady was piqued by her indifference, and began to mention going away.

3. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To value; to fix reputation as on a point.

[Je piquer, French.]

Children, having made it easy to part with what they have, may pique themselves in being kind.

Men apply themselves to two or three foreign dreads, and which are called the learned, languages, and pique themselves upon their skill in them.

To PIQUE, v. a. See PICKER.

PICQUELER, n. f. A robber; a plunderer. Rather pickpocket.

When the guardian protested to engage in fashion, the word was given, that the guardian would soon be seconded by some other picqueler from the same camp.

PIQUET, n. f. [picquet, Fr.] A game at cards.

She commonly went up at ten,

Unless piquet was in the way.

Instead of entertaining themselves at ombre or piquet, they would wrestle and pitch the bar.

PIRACY, n. f. [παιρησια; piratica, Latin; piraterie, Fr. from pirate.] The act or practice of robbing on the sea.

Our gallants, in their fresh gale of fortune, began to skim the seas with their piracies.

Now shall the ocean, as thy Thames, be free

From both these sales of storms and piracy.

PIS

Fame swifter, than your winged navy flies,
Sounding your name, and talking dreadful news

To all that piracy and rapine use.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracies; though he practised the same trade.

PIRATE, n. f. [παιρητης; pirata, Latin; pirate, French.]

1. A sea robber.

Pirates all nations are to prosecute, not so much in the right of their own tears, as upon the band of human society.

Relate, if business or the thirst of gain engage your journey o'er the pathless main,

Where savage pirates seek through seas unknown

The lives of others, vent'rons of their own.

2. Any robber; particularly a bookseller who seizes the copies of other men.

To PIRATE, v. n. [from the noun.] To rob by sea.

When they were a little got out of their former condition, they robbed at land and pirated by sea.

To PIRATE, v. a. [pirater, Fr.] To take by robbery.

They advertised, they would pirate his edition.

PIRATIC, adj. [piraticus, Latin; from pirate.]

1. Predatory; robbing; consisting in robbery.

Having gotten together ships and barks, fell to the end of piratical trade, robbing, spoiling, and taking prisoners the ships of all nations.

2. Practising robbery.

The errors of the priests were multiplied by piratical painters; to not one of whom I ever gave any other encouragement, than that of not protecting them.

PISCARY, n. f. A privilege of fishing.

PISCATION, n. f. [piscatio, Latin.] The act or practice of fishing.

There are four books of cynetics, or venation, five of judiciums, or piscation, commented by Rutebifus.

PISCIVORY, adj. [piscivorus, Latin.] Relating to fishes.

On this monument is represented, in bas-relief, Neptune among the satyrs, to show that this poet was the inventor of piscivorous eclogues.

PISCIVOROUS, adj. [piscivorus and voro.] Fish-eating; living on fish.

In birds that are not carnivorous, the meat is swallowed into the crop, or into a kind of antestomach, observed in piscivorous birds, where it is softened and mollified by some proper juice.

PISH, interj. A contemptuous exclamation. This is sometimes spoken and written pphae. I know not then etymology, and imagine them formed by chance.

There was never yet philosopher that could endure the toothach patiently; However they have writ the fable of Gods,

And made a pish at chance or sufferance.

She frowned and cried pish, when I said a thing that I stole.

To PISH, v. n. [from the interjection.] to express contempt.

He turn'd over your flower, shook his head, and pish'd at every line of it.

PISMIRE, n. f. [mirmis, Sax. pismire, Dut.] An ant; an emmet.

His elements, as worms might prevail,

Might fit a pismire or a whale.

Prejudicial to fruit are pismires, caterpillars, and mice.

To PISS, v. n. [pissen, Fr. pissen, Dut.] To make water.

I charge the pissing conduit run nothing but claret.

Once ash pissen, the red piss for company.

Once possess'd of what with care you save,

The wanton boys would piss upon your grave.

PIT

Piss, n. f. [from the verb.] Urine; animal water.

My spleen is at the little rogues, it would vex one more to be knocked on the head with a piss-pot than a thunder-bolt. Pope.

Pissabed, n. f. A yellow flower growing in the grass.

Pissburr, adj. Stained with urine.

Pistachio, n. f. [pistache, Fr. pistacchi, Italian; pistachia, Latin.]

The pistachio is of an oblong figure, pointed at both ends, about half an inch in length; the kernel is of a green colour and a soft and unctuous substance, much like the pulp of an almond, of a pleasant taste: pistachios were known to the ancients, and the Arabians call them peffuch and seffuch, and we sometimes peffich nuts. Hill.

Pistachios, so they are good, and not musty, joined with almonds, are an excellent nourisher. Bacon.

PISTE, n. f. [Fr.] The track or tread a horseman makes upon the ground he goes over.

PISTILLATION, n. f. [pistillum, Lat.] The act of pounding in a mortar.

and syringes, whereby the suction or attraction is caused; an embolus.

PIT, n. f. [pit, Sax.]

1. A hole in the ground.

Tumble me into some loathsome pit,

Where never man's eye may behold my body. Shakespeare.

Our enemies have beat us to the pit;

It is more worthy to leap in ourselves,

Than tarry till they push us. Shakespeare.

Pits upon the sea-shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand; but in some places of Africa, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

2. Abyss; profundity.

Get you gone,

And from the pit of Acheron

Meet me in the morning.

Into what pit thou fellest

From what height fallen. Milton.

3. The grave.

O Lord, think no scorn of me, lest I become like them that go down into the pit. Psalms.

4. The area on which cocks fight; whence the phrase, to fly the pit.

Make him glad, at least, to quit

His victory, and fly the pit. Hudibras.

They managed the dispute as fiercely as two game-cocks in the pit. Locke.

5. The middle part of the theatre.

Let Cally, Cockwood, Fopling share the pit,

And in their folly show the writer's wit. Dryden.

Now look for us, and a kind hearty pit;

For he who pleases, never fails of wit. Dryden.

6. [pis, pris, old Fr. from pectus, Latin.]

Any hollow of the body: as, the pit of the stomach; the arm pit.

7. A dint made by the finger.

8. A mark made by a disease.

To PIT, v. a.

1. To press into hollows.

An anafura, a species of dropsy, is characterized by the swelling and softness of the skin, which gives way to the least impression, and remains pitted for some time. Shurp.

2. To mark with small hollows, as by the smallpox.

PITAPAT, n. f. [probably from pas a pas, or patte patte, Fr.]

1. A flutter; a palpitation.

A lion meets him, and the fox's heart went pitapat. L'Estrange.

2. A light quick step.

Now I hear the pitapat of a pretty foot through the dark alley: no, 'tis the son of a mare that's broken loose, and munching upon the melons. Dryden.

PITCH, n. f. [pit, Sax. pix, Lat.]

1. The resin of the pine extracted by fire and inspissated.

They that touch pitch will be defiled. Proverbs.

A rainy vapour

Comes on as blacke as pitch. Chapman.

A vessel imbar'd round with pitch. Milton.

2. [from pit, Fr. Skinner.] Any degree of elevation or height.

Lovely concord and most sacred peace

Doth nourish virtue, and fast friendship breeds,

Weak she makes strong, and strong things does increase. Spenser.

Till it the pitch of highest praise exceeds. Shakespeare.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakespeare.

Arm thy heart, and fill thy thoughts

To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,

And mount her pitch. Shakespeare.

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch,

I have, perhaps, some shallow judgment. Shakespeare.

That greates work, unless the teede of Jove,

The deathlesse muses, undertake, maintains a pitch above

All mortall powers. Chapman.

Down they fell,

Driv'n headlong from the pitch of heav'n, down

Into this deep. Milton.

Others expectation was raised to a higher pitch than probably it would. Hannond.

Cannons shoot the higher pitches,

The lower we let down their breeches. Hudibras.

Alcibiades was one of the best orators of his age, notwithstanding he lived at a time when learning was at the highest pitch. Addison.

3. Highest rise. Not used.

A beauty wailing, and distressed widow,

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts

To base declension and loath'd bigwamy. Shakespeare.

4. State with respect to lowness or height.

From this high pitch let us descend

A lower flight; and speak of things at hand. Milton.

By how much from the top of wondrous glory,

Strongest of mortal men,

To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n. Milton.

5. Size; stature.

That infernal monster having cast

His weary foe into the living well,

'Gan high advance his broad discolour'd breast

Above his wonted pitch. Spenser.

Were the whole frame here,

It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,

Your roof were not sufficient to contain it. Shakespeare.

It turn'd itself to Ralph's shape;

So like in person, garb, and pitch,

'Twas hard to interpret which was which. Hudibras.

6. Degree; rate.

To overcome in battle, and subdue

Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite

Mandlaughter, shall be held the highest pitch

Of human glory. Milton.

Our resident Tom

From Venice is come,

And hath left the statesman behind him,

Talks at the same pitch,

Is as wise, is as rich,

And just where you left him, you find him. Denham.

Princes that fear'd him, grieve; concerned to see

No pitch of glory from the grave is free. Waller.

Evangelical innocence, such as the gospel accepts, though mingled with several infirmities and defects, yet amounts to such a pitch of righteousness, as we call sincerity. South.

When the sun's heat is thus far advanced, 'tis but just come up to the pitch of another set of vegetables, and but great enough to excite the terrestrial particles, which are more ponderous. Woodward.

To PITCH, v. a. preterit pitched; participle pitched, anciently pitch. See PIGHT. [appicciare, Italian.]

1. To fix; to plant.

PLACKET, or plaguet. n. f. A petticoat.
You might have pinch'd a plaguet, it was senseless. Shakspeare.
The bone-ach is the curse dependant on those that war for a plaguet. Shakspeare.
PLAGIARISM. n. f. [from plagiary.] Literary theft; adoption of the thoughts or works of another.
With great impropriety, as well as plagiary, they have most injuriously been transferred into proverbial maxims. Swift.
PLAGIARY. n. f. [from plagium, Lat.]
1. A thief in literature; one who steals the thoughts or writings of another.
The ensuing discourse, lest I chance to be traduced for a plagiary by him who has played the thief, was one of those that, by a worthy hand, were stolen from me. South.
Without invention, a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others; both are allowed sometimes to copy and transcribe. Dryden.
2. The crime of literary theft. Not used.
Plagiary had not its nativity with printing, but began when the paucity of books scarce wanted that invention. Brown.
PLAGUE. n. f. [plaghe, Dutch; plage, Teutonic; plaga, Latin; πλῆγη.]
1. Pestilence; a disease eminently contagious and destructive.
Thou art a bile,
A plague-fore or imbol'd carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. Shakspeare.
The general opinion is, that years hot and moist are most pestilent; yet many times there have been great plagues in dry years. Bacon.
Snakes, that use within thy house for shade,
Securely lurk, and, like a plague, invade Thy cattle with venom. Mary.
All those plagues, which earth and air had brooded,
First on inferior creatures try'd their force,
And last they seized on man. Jac and Dryden.
2. State of misery.
I am set in my plague, and my heaviness is ever in my fight. Psalms.
3. Any thing troublesome or vexatious.
'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind. Shakspeare.
I am not mad, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity. Shakspeare.
Good or bad company is the greatest blessing or greatest plague of life. L'Estrange.
Sometimes my plague, sometimes my darling,
Killing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.
To PLAGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To infect with pestilence.
2. To infect with disease; to oppress with calamity.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee. Shakspeare.
Thus were they plagu'd
And worn with famine. Milton.
3. To trouble; to tease; to vex; to harass; to torment; to afflict; to distress; to torture; to embarrass; to excruciate; to make uneasy; to disturb. In this sense it is used ludicrously.
If her nature be so,
That she will plague the man that loves her most,
And take delight to encrease a witch's woe,
That all her nature's goodly gifts are lost. Spenser.
People are storm'd out of their reason, plagu'd into a compliance, and forced to yield in their own defence. Collier.
When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and talks a tumbling over his papers, to see if he can start a law suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison.
PLAGUILY. adv. [from plaguy.] Vexatiously; horribly. A low word.

P L A

This whispering bodes me no good; but he has me so plaguily under the lash, I dare not interpose him. Dryden.
You look'd scornful, and swift at the dean;
But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips. Swift.
PLAGUOUS. adj. [from plague.] Vexatious; troublesome. A low word.
Of heats,
Add one more to the plaguily bill. Dewey.
What perils do environ
The man that needles with cold iron?
What plaguily mischiefs and mishaps
Do dog him still with after-claps? Hudibras.
PLAICE. n. f. [plac, Dutch.] A flat fish.
Of flat fish there are toles, flowkes, dabs, and plaice. Cave.
PLAID. n. f. A striped or variegated cloth; an outer loose weed worn much by the highlanders in Scotland: there is a particular kind worn too by the women.
PLAIN. adj. [planus, Latin.]
1. Smooth; level; flat; free from protuberances or excrescences. In this sense, especially in philosophical writings, it is frequently written plane: as, a plane superficies.
It was his policy to leave no hold behind him, but to make all plain and waste. Spenser.
The south and south east sides are rocky and mountainous, but plain in the midst. Savage.
They were wont to make their canoes or boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of fire. Heylin.
Thy incyared must employ thy sturdy reer
To turn the glebe; besides thy daily pain
To break the clods, and make the surface plain. Dryden.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison.
2. Open; clear; flat.
Our troops beat an army in plain fight and open field. Fulton.
3. Void of ornament; simple.
A crown of ready gold inclos'd her brow,
Plain without pomp, and rich without a frow. Dryden.
A man of sense can artifice disdain,
As men of wealth may venture to go plain. Young.
4. Artless; not subtle; not specious; not learned; simple.
In choice of instruments, it is better to chuse men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report faithfully the success, than those that are coming to contrive somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report. Bacon.
Of many plain, yet pious christians, there cannot be a number. Hammond.
The experiments alledged with so much confidence, and told by an author that writ like a plain man, and one whose profession was to tell truth, helped me to resolve upon making the trial. Temple.
My heart was made to sit and pair within Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Ros.
Must then at once, the character to save,
The plain rough hero turn a civill knave? Pope.
5. Honestly rough; open; sincere; not soft in language.
Give me leave to be plain with you, that yourself give no just cause of scandal. Bacon.
6. Mere; bare.
He that begu'd you in a plain accent, was a plain knave, which, for my part, I will not be. Shakspeare.
Some have at first for wits, then poets pass,
Turn'd critics next, and prov'd plain fools at last. Pope.
7. Evident; clear; discernible; not obscure.
They wondered there should appear any difficulty in any expressions, which to them seem'd very clear and plain. Clarendon.

PLA

Express thyself in plain, not doubtful words.
That ground for quarrels or disputes affords. Deak.
I can make the difference more plain, by giving you my method of proceeding in my translations;
I considered the genius and distinguishing character of my author. Dryden.

'Tis plain in the history, that Esau was never subject to Jacob. Locke.

That children have such a right, is plain from the laws of God; that men are convinced that children have such a right, is evident from the law of the land. Locke.

It is plain, that these discourses are calculated for none, but the fashionable part of womankind. Spett.

To speak one thing, mix'd dialects they join;
Divide the simple, and the plain define. Prior.

8. Not varied by much art; simple.
A plain song plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.

His diet was of the plainest meats, and commonly not only his dishes, but the parts of them were such as most others would refuse. Felt.

PLAIN, adv.
1. Not obscurely.
2. Distinctly; articulately.

The sting of his tongue was loosed, and he spoke plain. Mark.

3. Simply; with rough sincerity.
Goodman Felt is allowed by every body to be a plain-spoken person, and a man of very few words;
tropes and figures are his aversion. Addison.

PLAIN, n. f. [plaine, French.] Level ground; open field; flat expanse; often, a field of battle.

In a plain in the land of Shinar they dwelt.

The Scots took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsok their hill, and marched into the plain directly towards them. Hayward.

They erected their castles and habitations in the plains and open countries, where they found most fruitful lands, and turned the Irish into the woods and mountains. Davies.

Four forth Britannia's regions on the plain.

While here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

The impetuous counter pants in every vein,
And paining seems to beat the distant plain. Pope.

To PLAIN, v. a. [from the noun.] To level; to make even.

Upon one wing the artillery was drawn, every piece having his guard of pioneers to plain the ways. Hayward.

To PLAIN, v. n. [plandre, je plains, Fr.]
To lament; to wail. Little used.

Long since my voice is hoarse, and throat is sore,
With cries to skies, and curses to the ground;
But more I plain, I feel my woes the more. Sidney.

The fox, that first this cause of grief did find,
'Can first thus plain his case with words unkind. Spenser.

The incessant weeping of my wife,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
For'd me to seek delays. Shakespeare.

He to himself thus plain'd.
PLAINDEALING, adj. [plain and deal.]
Honest; open; acting without art.

'Though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied, but I am a plain-dealing villain. Shakespeare.

Bring a plaindealing innocence into a couliney with necessary prudence. Strange.

PLAINDEALING, n. f. Management void of art; sincerity.

I am no politician; and was ever thought to have too little wit, and too much plaindealing for a statesman. Denham.

It looks as fate with nature's law may strive
To new plaindealing once an age would thrive. Dryden.

PLAINLY, adv. [from plain.]
1. Levelly; basily.
2. Not subtilly; not speciously.
3. Without ornament.

PLA

4. Without gloss; sincerely.

You write to me with the freedom of a friend, setting down your thoughts as they occur, and dealing plainly with me in the matter. Pope.

5. In earnest; fairly.
They charged the enemies horse so gallantly, that they gave ground; and at last plainly run to a safe place. Clarendon.

6. Evidently; clearly; not obscurely.
St. Augustine acknowledgeth, that they are not only set down, but also plainly set down in scripture; so that he which heareth or readeth, may without difficulty understand. Hooker.

Coriolanus neither cares whether they love or hate him; and out of his carelessness, lets them plainly see it. Shakespeare.

From Epiphanius's censure of Origen, one may perceive plainly, that he thought the Anti-wicene church in general, both before and after Origen, to be of a very contrary judgment to that which he condemns in Lucian and Origen, that is, to Arianism. Waterland.

By that seed
It meant the great deliverer, who shall bruise
The serpent's head, who to thee soon Plainly shall be reveal'd. Milton.

We see plainly that we have the means, and that nothing but the application of them is wanting. Addison.

PLAINNESS, n. f. [from plain.]
1. Levelness; flatness.

2. Want of ornament; want of show.
If some pride with want may be allowed,
We in our plainness may be justly proud.
Whatever he's pleas'd to own, can need no show. Dryden.

As shades most sweetly recommend the light;
So modest plainness sets off brightly wit. Pope.

3. Openness; rough sincerity.
Well, said Basilides, I have not chosen Demetrius for his fighting nor for his discouraging, but for his plainness and honesty, and therein I know he will not deceive me. Sidney.

Your plainness and your shortness please me well.

Think'st thou, that duty shall have diend to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows; to plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare.

Plainness and freedom, an epistolary rule required.

4. Artlessness; simplicity.
All laugh to find Unflinching plainness to overtake thy mind,
That thou could'st so firmly persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths. Dryden.

PLAIN, n. f. [plainte, French.]
1. Lamentation; complaint; lament.

Then go in plaint, and in one word say this.
Helpless is plaint, who toils himself of blis. Sidney.

Boothless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds.

From inward grief
His bursting passion into plaints thus pour'd. Milton.

2. Exprobation of injury.
There are three just grounds of war with Spain;
One cry'd out, two upon defence. Bacon.

3. Expression of sorrow.
How many children's plaints, and mothers cries!

Where though I mourn my matchless loss alone,
And none between my weakness judge and me;
Yet even these gentle walls allow my moan,
Whole doleful echoes to my plaints agree. Wotton.

Lamenting where the hapless par-sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton.

For her relief,
Vext with the long expressions of my grief,
Receive these plaints. Waller.

PLAINFUL, adj. [plaint and full.] Com-commences a suit in law against another:

opposed to the defendant.

PLA

The plaintiff proved the debt by three positive witnesses, and the defendant was cast in costs and damages. Strange.

You and I shall talk in cold friendship at a bar before a judge, by way of plaintiff and defendant. Dryden.

In such a cause the plaintiff will be hiss'd,
My lord, the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd. Pope.

PLAINTIFF, adj. [plaintif, Fr.] Complaining. Not in use.

His younger son on the polluted ground,
First fruit of death, lies plaintif of a wound
Giv'n by a brother's hand. Prior.

PLAINTIVE, adj. [plaintif, Fr.] Complaining; lamenting; expressive of sorrow.

His careful mother heard the plaintive sound, Encompass'd with her sea-green sisters round. Dry.

The goddess heard,
Rose like a morning mist, and thus began
To tooth the furrows of her plaintive foun. Dryden.

Can Nature's voice
Plaintive be drown'd, or lessen'd in the noise,
Though shouts as thunder loud afflict the air. Prior.

Leviathans in plaintive thunders cry. Young.

PLAINWORK, n. f. [plain and work.] Needlework as distinguished from embroidery; the common practice of sewing or making linen garments.

She went to plainwork, and to purring brooks. Pope.

PLAIT, n. f. [corrupted from plight or ply, from to ply or fold.] A fold; a double.

Should the voice directly strike the brain,
It would astonish and confuse it much;
Therefore these plaits and folds the sound restrain,
That the organ may more gently touch. Davies.

Nor shall thy lower garments artful plait,
From thy fair side dependent to thy feet,
Arm their chaste beauties with a modest pride,
And double ev'ry charm they seek to hide. Prior.

'Tis very difficult to trace out the figure of a vest through all the plaits and foldings of the drapery. Addison.

To PLAIT, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fold; to double.

The busy sylphs surround their darling care,
Some fold the fleece, while others plait the gown;
And Pety's prais'd for labours not her own. Pope.

Will she on Sunday morn thy neck-cloth plait? Gay.

2. To weave; to braid.

Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting
the hair. Peter.

What she demands, incessant I'll prepare;
I'll weave her garlands, and I'll plait her hair;
My busy diligence shall deck her board,
For there at last I may approach my lord. Prior.

Your hands have not been employed in plaiting
the hair, and adorning your persons; but in making clothes for the naked. Law.

3. To entangle; to involve.

Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides,
Who covers faults at last with shame decides. Shakspeare.

PLAITER, n. f. [from plait.] He that plaits.
PLAN, n. f. [plan, French.]

1. A scheme; a form; a model.
Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights,
The generous plan of power delivered down
From age to age to your renown'd forefathers. Addison.

2. A plot of any building, or ichnography;
form of any thing laid down on paper.

Artificer and plans relieve'd my solemn hours;
Founded palaces, and planted bow'rs. Prior.

To PLAN, v. a. [from the noun.] To scheme; to form in design.

Vouchsafe the means of vengeance to debate,
And plan with all thy arts the scene of fate. Pope.

PLANARY, adj. Pertaining to a plane.

PLANCHED, adj. [from planch.] Made of boards.

He hath a garden circumw'd with brick,
Whole western side is with a vineyard backt,
And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with the biggest key. Shakspeare.

PLANCHER. n. f. [plancher, Fr.] A floor of wood. Not used.

Oak, cedar, and ohestnut are the best builders; some are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnuts. Bacon.

PLANCHING. n. f. [in carpentry.] The laying of floors in a building. Ditt.

PLANE. n. f. [planus, Lat. Planis is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]

1. A level surface.

Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptic, in all kinds of angles. Newton.

Projectiles would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the irregularities of the plane on which they move, stop their motion. Chambers.

2. [plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.

The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Johnson.

TO PLANE. v. a. [plauer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To level; to smooth; to free from inequalities.

The foundation of the Roman causeway was made of rough stone, joined with a moist firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of such stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fast. Arbuthnot.

2. To smooth with a plane.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed. Johnson.

PLANE-TREE. n. f. [platanus, Lat. plane, platanus, French.]

The plane-tree hath an amaranthaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamens, which are all collected into spiculate little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same tree, are tinged, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down; it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane. Dryden.

PLANET. n. f. [planeta, Lat. πλανη; planette, French.]

Planets are the errant or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixed ones always in the same position to one another; we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus; and the Moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth; all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes the year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving makes our day and night, it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes; we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four miles; and indeed the motion of the earth would make the far side so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Ran'd like a wandering planet over me,
And could it not inspire them to relent? Shakspeare.

And planets, planet struck, real eclipse
Then surer'd. Milton.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown.

The Chaldeans were much devoted to astrological devices, and had an opinion that every hour of the day was governed by a particular planet, reckoning them according to their usual order, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury, Luna. Wilkins.

PLANETARY. adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

1. Pertaining to the planets.

Their planetary motions and aspects. Milton.
To mable and to brass, such features give,
Distinguish the face and planetary way,
And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Granville.

2. Under the denomination of any particular planet.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's power,

That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd. Dryden.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think, I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am in my fictions. Addison.

3. Produced by the planets.

Here's gold, go on;
So as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakspeare.

We are the guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as it we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakspeare.

4. Having the nature of a planet; erratick.

We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move;
Four second planets his dominion own,
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackmore.

PLANETICAL. adj. [from planet.] Pertaining to planets.

Add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, the eclipses of sun and moon, conjunctions and oppositions planetical. Brown.

PLANETSTRUCK. adj. [planet and strike.]

Blasted: fidere afflatus.
Wonder not much it thus amaz'd I look,
Since I saw you, I have been planetstruck;
A beauty, and so rare, I did defy. Sackling.

PLANIFOLIOUS. adj. [planus and folium, Latin.] Flowers are so called, when made up of plain leaves, set together in circular rows round the centre, whose face is usually uneven, rough, and jagged. Ditt.

PLANIMETRICAL. adj. [from planimetry.] Pertaining to the mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIMETRY. n. f. [planus, Lat. and μετρίω; planimetrie, French.] The mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIPETALOUS. adj. [planus, Latin, and πίταλον.] Flatleaved, as when the small flowers are hollow only at the bottom, but flat upward, as in dandelion and succory. Ditt.

TO PLANISH. v. a. [from plane.] To polish; to smooth. A word used by manufacturers.

PLANISPHERE. n. f. [planus, Latin, and sphere.] A sphere projected on a plane; a map of one or both hemispheres.

PLANK. n. f. [planche, French.] A thick strong board.

The doors of planks were; their close exquisite, kept with a double key. Chapman.

The smoothed plank new rubb'd with balm. Milt.

Some Turkish bows are of that strength, as to pierce a plank of six inches. Wilkins.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dege.

Be warn'd to blunt the wat'ry way,
For late I saw adrift disjointed planks,
And empty tombs erected on the banks. Dryden.

TO PLANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover or lay with planks.

If you do but plank the ground over, it will breed salt-petre. Bacon.

A seed of monstrous height appear'd;
The sides were plank'd with pine. Dryden.

PLANOCONICAL. adj. [planus and conus, Latin.] Level on one side and conical on others.

Some few are planoconical, whose superficies is in part level between both ends. Green.

PLANCONVEX. adj. [planus and convexus, Latin.] Flat on the one side and convex on the other.

It took two object-glasses, the one a planconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet. Newton.

PLANT. n. f. [plante, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Rey has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds.

1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be discernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be visible, but yet have an imperfect or staminate flower, like such a one, as is without the petals, having only the stamens and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juicy milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappous, or winged with down, but emit no milk. 6. The herbage capitata, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, filibus or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jets.

8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no down adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joint together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an aspect like a lady's umbrella: [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed about the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tuberos root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelled or striated seed. 12. The scissile plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant fan; their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petals; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. crown'd,
Thus through the gardens leads its streams around. Pope.

2. Fruitful; fertile.

Take up the fifth part of the land in the seven plenteous years. Genes.
PLENTIFULNESS. adv. [from plenteous.] Copiously; abundantly; exuberantly;
plentifully.

Thy due from me is tears,
Which nature, love, and thal tenderness
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously. Shaksp.
God created the great whales and each Soul living, each that crept, which plenteously
The waters generated. Milton.
God proves us in this life, that he may the more plenteously reward us in the next. Wake.

PLENTIFULNESS. n. f. [from plenteous.]
Abundance; fertility; plenty.

The seven years of plenteousness in Egypt were ended. Genes.

PLENTIFUL adj. [plenty and full.]
Copious; abundant; exuberant; fruitful. This is rather used in prose than plenteous.

To Amaltha he gave a country, bending like a horn; whence the tale of Amaltha's plentiful horn. Ralegh.

He that is plentiful in expences, will hardly be preserved from decay. Bacon.

It be a long winter it is commonly a more plentiful year. Bacon.

When they had a plentiful harvest, the farmer had hardly any corn. L'Estrange.

Alcibiades was a young man of noble birth, excellent education, and a plentiful fortune. Suys.

PLENTIFULLY. adv. [from plentiful.]
Copiously; abundantly.

They were not multiplied before, but they were at that time plentifully increased. Brown.

Born is plentifully furnished with water, there being a great multitude of fountains. Addison.

PLENTIFULNESS. n. f. [from plentiful.]
The state of being plentiful; abundance; fertility.

PLENTY. n. f. [from plenus, Lat. full.]
1. Abundance; such a quantity as is more than enough.

Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenty and joyful birth. Shaksp.
What makes land, as well as other things, dear, is plenty of buyers, and but few sellers; and so plenty of sellers and few buyers makes land cheap. Locke.

2. Fruitfulness; exuberance.

The teeming clouds
Descend in glad plenty o'er the world. Thomson.
3. It is used, I think barbarously, for plentiful.

To graze with thy calves,
Where water is plenty. Tupper.
If reason were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason on compulsion. Shakspere.

4. A state in which enough is had and enjoyed.

Ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise
the Lord. Joel.

Whole grievance is satiety of ease,
Freedom from pain, and plenty their disease. Harte.

PLEONASM. n. f. [pleonasmus, Fr. pleonaf-mus, Lat.] A figure of rhetoric, by which more words are used than are necessary.

PLESH. n. f. [A word used by Spenser instead of plash, for the convenience of rhyme.] A puddle; a boggy marsh.

Out of the wound the red blood flowed fresh,
That underneath his feet soon made a purple plash. Spenser.

PLETHORA. n. f. [from πλεθρα.] The state in which the vessels are fuller of humours than is agreeable to a natural state or health; arises either from a diminution of some natural evacuations, or from debauch and feeding higher or more in quantity than the ordinary powers of the viscera can digest: evacuations and exercise are its remedies.

The diseases of the fluids are a plethora, or too great abundance of laudable juices. Arbuthnot.

PLETHORETICK. adj. [from plethora.]
PLETHORICK. adj. Having a full habit.

The fluids, as they consist of spirit, water, salts, oil, and terreftrial parts, differ according to the redundance of the whole or of any of these; and therefore the plethorick are phlegmatick, oily, saline, earthy, or dry. Arbuthnot.

PLETHORY. n. f. [plethore, Fr. from πλεθρα.] Fullness of habit.

In too great repletion, the elastic force of the tube throws the fluid with too great a force, and subjects the animal to the diseases depending upon a plethory. Arbuthnot.

PLEVIN. n. f. [plevine, Fr. plexina, low Lat.] In law, a warrant or assurance.
See REPLEVIN. Dict.

PLEURISY. n. f. [πλευριτις; pleuresie, Fr. pleuritis, Lat.] An inflammation of the pleura, though it is hardly distinguish-able from an inflammation of any other part of the breast, which are all from the same cause, a stagnated blood; and are to be remedied by evacuation, suppuration, or expectoration, or all together. Quincy.

PLEURITICAL. adj. [from pleurisy.]
PLEURITICK. adj.

1. Diseased with a pleurisy.
The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuritic people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbuthnot.

2. Denoting a pleurisy.
His blood was pleuritical, it had neither colour
nor confidence. Wijeman.

PLIABLE. adj. [pliable, from plier, Fr. to bend.].

1. Easy to be bent; flexible.
Though an net be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt, and make the very law so pliable and bending, that it shall be impossible to be broke. South.

Whether the different motions of the animal spirits may have any effect on the mould of the face, when the lineaments are pliable and tender,
I shall leave to the curious. Addison.

2. Flexible of disposition; easy to be persuaded.

PLIABLENESS. n. f. [from pliable.]
1. Flexibility; easiness to be bent.

2. Flexibility of mind.
God's preventing graces, which have thus fitted the soil for the kindly seeds-inne, planted pliableness, humility in the heart. Hammond.

Compare the ingenious pliability to virtuous councils in youth, as it comes fresh out of the hands of nature, with the confirmed obstinacy in most sorts of sin, that is to be found in an aged sinner. South.

PLIANCY. n. f. [from pliant.] Easiness to be bent.

Had not exercise been necessary, nature would not have given such an activity to the limbs, and such a pliancy to every part, as produces those compressions and extensions necessary for the preservation of such a system. Addison.

PLIANT. adj. [pliant, Fr.]

1. Bending; tough; flexible; flexible; lithe; limber.

An anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether the fibres may not be made up of a finer and more pliant thread. Spa.

2. Easy to take a form.

Particles of heav'nly fire,
Or earth but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still retain'd th' ethereal energy. Dryden.

As the wax melts that to the flame I hold,
Pliant and warm may fill her heart remain,
Soft to the print, but ne'er turn hard again. Graville.

3. Easily complying.

In languages the tongue is more pliant to sounds, the joints more supple to all sorts of activity, in youth than afterwards. Bacon.
Those, who bore bulwarks on their backs,
Now practice ev'ry pliant gesture,
Opening their trunk for ev'ry teller. Shaksp.

4. Easily persuaded.

The will was then docile and pliant to reason, it met the dictates of a clarified und standing half-way. South.

PLIANTNESS. n. f. [from pliant.] Elegibility; toughness.

Greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixity,
pliancy or softness. Bacon.

PLICATURE. n. f. [plicatura, from plere, Latin.] Fold; double.

PLICATION. n. f. [plicatio, Latin.] Fold; double.
Plication is used somewhere in Clarissa.

PLIERS. n. f. [from ply.] An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten up small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring small plate into a circular form. Wijeman.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers.

To PLIGHT. v. a. [plichten, Dutch.]

1. To pledge; to give as surety.
He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land. Spa.
Saint Withold

Met the night mare, and her unfeild,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shaksp.
I am in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith. Shaksp.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight. Dry.
New loves you seek,
New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break. Dry.

I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hangs about v. Add.

2. To braid; to weave. [from plico, I whence to ply or bend, and plight, plait, or plait, a fold or flexure.]

Her head the fondly would agnise
With gaudie girlonds, or flesh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Spa.
I took it for a fairy vision

Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play i' th' plighted clouds. South.

PLIGHT. n. f. This word Skinner imagito be derived from the Dutch, plu office or employment; but Junius serves, that plight, Saxon, signifies disor pressing danger; whence I sup-plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.]

1. Condition; state.

When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful light Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight. Spa.
I think myself in better plight for a tender
you are. Shaksp.

Befeech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Shaksp.

PLO

They in lowliest plight repentant stood Praying.

Milton.

Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable loathsome plight.
Most perfect hero tried in heaviliest plight
Of labours huge and hard.

Milton.

Milton.

2. Good case.
Who abuseth his cattle and starves them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his game is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath game to his comfort, and cattle in plight.

Tusser.

3. Pledge; gage. [from the verb.]
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

Shakespeare.

4. [from To plight.] A fold; a pucker;
a double; a puffle; a plait.

Yclad, for fear of scorching air,
All in a hiken canvas, lilly white,
Furled upon with many a folded plight.
A garment of some kind. Obsolete.

Spenser.

Because my wrack
Chanc't on his father's shore, he let not lack
My plight, or coat, or cloake, or any thing
Might cherish heat in me.

Chapman.

PLINTH. n. f. [πλινθος.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vi-truvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plinth, because it resembles a square tile: moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plathband.

Harris.

TO PLOD. v. n. [ploeghen, Dut. Skinner.]

1. To toil; to moul; to drudge; to travel.
A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by fits.
He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man might, puts his staff before him.
Th' unletter'd churlish, who believes in gross,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss.
Some stupid, plodding, money-loving wight,
Who wus their hearts by knowing black from white.

Dryden.

2. To travel laboriously.
Rogues, plod away o' the hoof, seek shelter,
puck.

Shakespeare.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day.
Halt thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

Shakespeare.

Ambitious love hath so far me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With froward vow my fault to have amended.

Shakespeare.

3. To study closely and dully.
Universal plodding prisons up
The humble spirits in the arteries;
Amotion and long during action tires
The fine vigour of the traveller.

Shakespeare.

He plods to turn his anxious suit
T' ap' in law, and prosecute.
She re-sound'd without plodding long,
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong.

Hudibras.

PRODDEN. n. f. [from plod.] A dull heavy laborious man.
Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with saucy looks;
What have continual pladders ever won,
Save hate authority from others books?

Shakespeare.

PLOUGH. n. f. [plow, Saxon. See PLAT.]

1. A final extent of ground.
It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide wastes set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Be choicely picked out from all the rest.

Spenser.

PLO

Plant ye with alders or willows a plot,
Where yearly as needeth no poles may be got.

Tusser.

This liketh moory plots, delights in fedge bowers.

Drayton.

Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villany.
Were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind.

Shakespeare.

When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection.
Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener.

Locke.

2. A plantation laid out.
Some goddess inhabiteth this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be burned in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it to perfect a plot.

Sidney.

3. A form; a scheme; a plan.
The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could infiltrate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage.

Spencer on Ireland.

4. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.
I have overheard a plot of death upon him.

Shakespeare.

Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress.

Daniel.

O think what anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots, and their last fatal periods!
O 'tis a dreadful interval of time,
Made up of horror all, and lig with death!

Addis.

5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved, and embarrassed; the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.

Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot.

Roscom.

Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not?
They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical.

Gay.

If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before.

Pope.

6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.

Frustrate all our plots and wiles.

Milton.

7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.

Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and pen'd
Six plays to attend
The taice of his negotiation.

Denham

TO PLOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.

The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murder me.

Shakespeare.

The wicked plotter against the just.
He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce
Thee from obedience.

Malton.

The wolf that round th' inclosure prow'd
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold.

Dryden.

2. To contrive; to scheme.

The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis answer'd, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain.

Weston.

TO PLOT. v. a.

1. To plan; to contrive.

With shame and sorrow fill'd:
Shame for his folly; sorrow out of time
For plotting an unprofitable crime.

Dryden.

2. To describe according to ichnography.
This treatise plots down Cornwall, as it now standeth, for the particulars.

Carew.

PLOTTIER. n. f. [from plot.]

1. Conspirator.

Colonel, we shall try who's the greater plotter of us two, I against the state, or you against the petticoat.

Dryden.

2. Contriver.

An irreghious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of thie woes.

Shakespeare.

PLOVER. n. f. [pluvier, Fr. pluvialis, Lat.]

A lapwing. A bird.
Of wild birds, Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant and plover.

Carew.

Some
The bitter knows his time or from the shore,
The plover when to scatter o'er the heath
And sing.

Thomson.

PLOUGH. n. f. [plow, Sax. plow, Danish;
ploegh, Dutch.]

1. The instrument with which the furrow are cut in the ground to receive the seed.
Till th' out-bow'd Cyclops land we teach; a race
Of proud-lind hostlers, that never tow,
Nor put a plant in earth, nor use a plow.
Look how the purple flower, which the plough
Hath sown in tender, languishing doth die.
Some ploughs differ in the length and shape of their beams, some in the share, others in the coulter and handles.

Mortimer.

In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings and awful fathers.

Thomson.

2. Tillage; culture of land.

3. A kind of plane.

Ainsworth.

TO PLOUGH. v. n. To practise aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.

Rebellion, insolence, sedition
We ourselves have plough'd for, low'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us.

Shakespeare.

Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow?
They only give the land one ploughing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black.

Mortimer.

TO PLOUGH. v. a.

1. To turn up with the plough.

Let the Volturnus
Plough Rome and harrow Italy.
Shou'd any have, to low'd, belong to you,
No doubt you'd send the rogue, in letters bound,
To work in Bridewell, or to plough your ground.

Dryden.

A man may plough, in stiff grounds the first time followed, an acre a day.
You find it ploughed into ridges and furrows.

Mortimer

2. To bring to view by the plough; with up.

Another of a dusky colour, nearly black; these are of these frequently ploughed up in the fields of Welden.

Warton.

3. To furrow; to divide.

When the puce her funeral rites had paid,
He plough'd the Tyrrhene seas with sails display'd.

Addison.

With speed we plough the watry way,
My power shall guard thee.

Pope.

4. To tear; to furrow.

Patent Olivia plough thy visage up
With her prepped nails.

Shakespeare.

PLOUGHBOY. n. f. [plough and boy.] A boy that follows the plough; a coarse ignorant boy.

A ploughboy, that has never seen any thing but thatched huts and his parish church, imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house.

Watts' Language.

PLU

Plougher. n. f. [from plough.] One who ploughs or cultivates ground.

When the country shall be replanted with corn, as it will, it will be followed; for the country people themselves are great ploughers and find it no wonder that there should be good traces of new games created.

Ploughland's n. n. f. [plough and land.] A farm for corn.

Who hath a ploughland casts all his seed there;

And yet allows his ground more corn should bear.

In this look are entered the names of the men who cultivated the top; the number, to ploughers, through each county; and the number of the children.

Ploughman. n. f. [plough and man.]

1. One that attends or uses the plough; a cultivator of corn.

When the plough is upon the furrow,

And many larks are ploughmen's clocks;

The cuckoo then on every tree

God provides the good things of the world;

To serve the needs of nature by the labours of the ploughman.

The careful ploughman doubting nothing,

Your reign no less affixes the ploughman's prayer;

Thou art the warm husbandry's best state.

The merchant gains by peace, and the toilers by war;

The shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploughman by dry.

Who can cease to admire

The ploughman's toil in his coarse attire.

I come to thee from plume pluck'd Richard.

To pluck up a heart or spirit.

Verbal expiation for taking up or returning of courage.

He willed them to pluck up their hearts, and make all things ready for a new assault, when he expected they should with courageous resolution recompense their late cowardice.

Pluck, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pull; a draw; a single act of plucking.

Birds kept coming and going all day; but to few at a time that the man did not think there was a pluck.

Were the ends of the bones dry, they could not, without great difficulty, obey the pluck's and attractions of the motory muscles.

2. [plughk, Erle.] I know not whether derived from the English, rather than the English from the Erle.] The heart, liver, and lights of an animal.

Plucker, n. f. [from pluck.] One that plucks.

Thou setter up and plucker down of kings!

Pull it as soon as you see the seed begin to grow brown, at which time let the plucker be it up in handfuls.

both which are more ponderous than silver. Hucon.

His pond'rous shield behind him cast. Milton.

Upon lying a weight in one of the scales, inferred eternally, though I think in that of transitory prosperity, affliction, wealth, and poverty, which formed very ponderous, they were not able to stir the opposite balance. Addison.

Because all the parts of an undistributed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed according to the difference of it, any conception, that can be supposed to be naturally made in such a fluid, must be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley.

1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.

Influenc'd by the rubble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly fit forth the eminency thereof. Brown.

TO POPULATE, v. n. [from populus, Latin.] To breed people.

When there be great floods of people, which go on to populate, without long feeling means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

POPULA'TION, n. f. from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the flock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

POPULOUS, adj. [from populus.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.

A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company. Shakespeare.

For the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n, yet populous, retains Number sufficient to people her realm. Milton.

PO'PULOUSLY, adv. [from populous.] With much people.

PO'PULOUSNESS, n. f. [from populous.] The state of abounding with people.

This will be allowed by any that considers the refinements, the splendour, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility with which it is governed. Temple.

PORCELAIN, n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from poire and cel; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semipellucid.

We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which hath in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown.

The fine materials make it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure is apt to break. Dryden.

These look like the workmanship of heav'n
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble moulds. Dryden.

2. [portulaca, Lat.] A herb. Ansforth.

PORCH, n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]

1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

I had went forth through the porch, and shut
the doors of the parlour. Judges.

Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. B. Jonson.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakespeare.

POR

PO'RCUPINE, n. f. [porc epi, or epic, Fr. porcupino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig; there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.

This tushhorn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine. Shakespeare.

Longbearded comets tick,
Like flaming porcupines, to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaving cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbutnot and Pope.

PORE, n. f. [porre, Fr. πῶρος.]

1. Sprinkle of the skin; passage of perspiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments, and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, it had on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why-was the fight
To such a tender ball as the eye confound,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.

Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.

From veins of valleys milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.

TO PORE, v. n. [πῶρος is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenceness and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inflict pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To look the light of truth, while truth the while Doth silently blind the eye. Shakespeare.

A book was writ, call'd Tetrachordon,
The subject new - it walk'd the town a while Numb'd men, good intellects, now it didna pore'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden.

Let him with pedants hunt for prints of books,
Pore on his life among the lazy common;
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.

With sharp end's fight pale antiquary pore
The inscription value, but the rust does pore
He hath been poring to learn on books, and that he imagines himself living in the pores of queen Mary. Shakespeare.

The design is to avoid the importation of prodigtry, to show that they understand it, and that they have not been poring upon it, and that they are able to do it. Rowe.

POR'BLIND, adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.] Neareighted; short-sighted.

Purblind men see best in the dimmest light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not purblind, and can read as well smaller letters, for that the light is nearer those that are purblind are thinner and more in others, and therefore the greater light the perisheth there. Pope.

PO'RNASS, n. f. [from poros] Fishes at pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the fractured bone, considering the poros of the bone below. Milton.

PORISTICK method, n. f. [πῶρος] In mathematics, is that which determines the nature of the thing. Rowe.

Ditt.

PORK. n. f. [porc, French; porcus, Latin.] Swine's flesh unsalted.

You are no good member of the commonwealth for, in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Shakespeare.

All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of plague.

Floyer.

PORKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.

Strut to the lodgements of his head he run, Where the fat porkers lie beneath the sun.

Pope.

PORKFEATER. n. f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.

This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkcutters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Shakespeare.

PORKET. n. f. [from pork.] A young hog.

A pretty appears.

And offerings to the flaming altars bears A porket, and a lamb that never suffer'd tears.

Dryden.

PORRIDGE. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.

A novel

Will serve thee in winter, more sweet than that, To shut up thy passions thou meant to bat.

Shakespeare.

POROUS. n. f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser.

Bacon.

POROUS. adj. [porous, Fr. from porc.] Having small spiracles or passages.

Vultures and dogges have torne from every lum His porous skin; and forth his soul is fled.

Chapman.

The rapid current, which through veins Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,

Rise a fresh fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden.

Milton.

Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd In the sun's orb, made porous to receive

And drink the liquid light, firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light.

Milton.

POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous parts.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it.

Digby on Boies.

PORPHYRE. n. f. [from πορφύρα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre, Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.

I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a veillar or upper piece of the same.

Peacham.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyry; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again.

Locke.

PORPOISE. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.

And wallowing porpice sport and lord it in the food.

Drayton.

Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatic together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and traits of a hog.

Locke.

Parc'd with upstungish'd thirst, Small beer I guile till I burst;

And then I drag a bloated corpus, Swell'd with a deepsy like a porpus.

Swift.

PORRACIOUS. adj. [porraceus, Lat. porrace, Fr.] Greenish.

If the lesser mistletoe be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting.

Wistman.

PORRECTION. n. f. [porreccio, Lat.] The act of reaching forth.

PORRET. n. f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.

Brown.

PORRIDGE. n. f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.

I had as lief you should tell me of a morsel of porridge.

Shakespeare.

PORRIDGE-POT. n. f. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.

PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.] 1. A Vessel in which broth is eaten.

A small wax candle put in a socket of brals, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular.

A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer.

The porringers, that in a row Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,

Were now but leathern buckets rang'd.

Swift.

2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headdress; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.— Why this was moulded on a porringer.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit run'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head.

Henry VIII.

PORT. n. f. [port, Fr. portus, Lat.] 1. A harbour; a safe station for ships.

Her small gondelay her port did make, And that gay pair, ensuing on the shore, Disburden'd her.

Spenser.

I should be still Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads.

The earl of Newcastle forced upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king.

A weather-beaten vessel holds Gladly the port.

2. [porta, Lat. portus, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.

Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughter of Zion.

He I accuse, Thy city ports by this bath enter'd.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care! That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide

To unmy watchful night; deep wail it now! Yet not to sound, and hail so deeply sweet,

As he, whose brow with homely bidden bound, Snorers out the watch of night.

The mad of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities, the other desolate and overgrown with grass, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd.

3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.

At Fortmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overlet and lost.

The linlocks touch, the pond'rous bull expires, The vigorous seaman every port hole plies,

And adds his heart to every gun he fires.

4. [portee, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing; external appearance; demeanour.

In that proud port, which her so goodly gazeth, Whiles her fair face she tears up to the sky,

And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth, Most goodly temperate ye may deliray.

Think you much to pay two thousand crowns, And bear the name and port of gentleman?

See Goodfrey there in purple clad and gold, His stately port and princely look behold.

Fairfax.

PORTCULLIS. } n.f. [portecouliſſe, Fr. quasi PORTCLUSE. } porta clauſa.] A sort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.

Over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compaſſure strong,
Neither uncleanly short, nor yet exceeding long.

The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hagyard 1.

She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Sygian pow'rs
Could once have mov'd. Milton.

Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
The force to ſuſtain, the town portcullis falls. Denham.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a ſeal as a portcullis against the importunity of the ſo neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with ſome ſpeaks of frailty, ſuch as they have been deſcribed in hiſtory. Dryden.

The figure of his body was ſtrong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it muſt deſerve the praife given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.

If a portrait painter is deſirous to riſe and improve his ſubject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dreſs from a temporary faſhion to one more permanent, which has annexed to it no idea of meaneſs from its being familiar to us.

In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeness, conſiſts more in taking the general air, than in obſerving the exact ſimilitude of every feature. Reynolds.

TO PORTRAIT. v. a. [portraire, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and ſhould be written in the following example portray.

In moſt exquiſite pictures, they ſhew and portrait not only the ſubtleſs of nature or beauty, but alſo round about ſhadow the rude thickneſs and energy alſo. Reynolds.

Portrait n. f. [from portraire, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance.

By the image of my carle I see
The portraiture of his. Shakespeare

Let some strange mysterious dream,
Wave at his wings in airy stream
Of lively portraiture display'd,
Sail on my eye-lids laid. Milton

Hereon was all the portraiture of a hart. Poeta
This is the portraiture of our earth, drive a white out flattery. Barnet

Her wry-mouth'd portraiture
Display'd the latest her counsellors endure. Pope
He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. Baker

TO PORTRAY, v. a. [portraire, Fr.]

1. To paint; to delineate by picture.

The earl of Warwick's ragged self is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church seats. Carew

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Ecclus.

Our phoenix queen was there portray'd too bright,
Beauteous alone could beauty take to right. Dryden

2. To adorn with pictures.

Various, with bountiful argument portray'd. Milton
PORTRESS, n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

The portress of hell-gate reply'd. Milton

The shoes put on, our faithful portress
Admits us in to form the fortlets,
While like a cat with walnuts shod,
Stumbling at every step the tread. Swift

PORTWIGGLE, n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round fulgence began to grow oval, after a while the head, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrnus, we a portwiggle or tadpole.
Brown's Vulgar Errors

PORE, adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd, th' admiring son
To holds the vaulted roofs of pore stone. Dryden

TO POSE, v. a. [from poser, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction,
zepele, Saxon. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop.

Learning was pos'd, philosophy was fet,
Sophisters taken in a philosopher's net. Herbert

How God's eternal son should be man's brother,
Poseth his prandish intellectual power. Cromwell
The only remaining question to me I confess is a posing one. Hammond

As an evidence of human infirmity, I shall give instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with these common enigmas of saguetism. Glanville

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children. Lacke

2. To appose; to interrogate.

She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very Duke of York or no. Bacon

POSEN, n. f. [from poser.] One that asks questions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that questioneth much, shall learn much;
but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser. Bacon

POSITED, adj. [positus, Latin.] It has the appearance of a participle preterit, but it has no verb. Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false. Hale

POSITION, n. f. [positio, Fr. positio, Lat.]

1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude that it retain the former position.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of the position of mountains, and the frequency of breezes. Temple

Since no one is all, and we have different properties of the same thing, according to our different position to it, it is not incongruous to try whether and the many not have notions that escaped him.

By varying the position of the eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light continually varied up to the spectrum as it did upon my eye. Newton

Place our lives in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it, for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Hutts' Logick

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or in therein committed against God, with what contentment we are aware us, when your own position are, that the things we observe should every one of them be deemed unto us than ten thousand lives? Hooker

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the positions that follow, but always on those which go before. Watts

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illusion is to conclude from the position of the antecedent into the position of the consequent, or the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pumpous;
or a double consonant, as title.

POSITIONAL, adj. [from position.] Respecting position.

The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown

POSITIVE, adj. [positivus, Lat. positivus, French.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed;
real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Burns

It is well and truly said in schools, positum there is nothing positive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or subsist, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Peckham

Hardness carries somewhat more of positivum in it than impenetrability, which is negative, and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than soli-dity itself. Lacke

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and to not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Lacke

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son, though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion.

I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of reason. Lymer

Some positive perishing tops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;
But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
And make each day a critic on the last. Pope

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, budeth universally; that which is positive, not so. Hooker

Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made. Hooker

The law is called positive, which is not labred, imprinted, or infused, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is imposed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command. White

Laws are but positivæ; love's pow'r we see,
Is nature's sanction, and her first decree. Dryden

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, which another law shall at the same time pass, with other view but that of advancing the power of the party alone, what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative?

6. Certain; assured; as, he was positive as to the fact.

POSITIVELY, adv. [from positive.]

1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be effected good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply. Bacon

2. Not negatively.

It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past. Bentley

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me some health, some little pain,
Before I positively speak in this. Shakespeare

It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other. Dryden

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms.

I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men. Spence

POSITIVENESS, n. f. [from positive.]

1. Actuality; not mere negation.

The positiveness of his of commission has both a the habitude of the will and in the executed action; whereas the positiveness of his of omission in the habitude of the will only. Norris

2. Peremptoriness; confidence.

This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one insignificant in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact, in the we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue

POSITIVITY, n. f. [from positive.] Peremptoriness; confidence. A low word.

Courage and positivity are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to join some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too. Watts

POSITIVE, n. f. [positura, Latin.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Supposing the positive of the party's hand should throw the dice, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that state be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Brown

POSSNET, n. f. [from basinet, Fr. Skinner.]

A little basin; a porringer; a skillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yielded toughness more than silver; and again, whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chafing dishes, possets, and such other silver vessels. Jacob

POSSE, n. f. [Latin.] An armed power, from posse comitatus, the power of the thiars. A low word.

The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon
As if the position that rules, were the result of the place, and came off with all the posse, the understanding is seized. Lacke

TO POSSESS, v. a. [possessus, Lat. possidet, French.]

1. To have as an owner; to be master of to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let intruders enter
Where folly now possesses. Shakespeare

Record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possesses,
Unto his son. Shakespeare

2. To seize; to obtain.

The English marched towards the river Eke, intending to possess a hill called Under-Eke.

Huguenot.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has of before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with.

Is he yet possess?

How much you would?

—Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Shakespeare.

This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,

May be possessed with some store of crowns.

Shakspeare.

This possession us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship.

Gay of the Tongue

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd

of happiness or not, who am alone

From all eternity?

Milton.

Hope to possess chymists and corpulenticians of the advantages to each party, by contederacy between them.

Boyle.

The intent of this fable is to possess us of a just state of the vanity of these craving appetites.

L'Estrange.

Whole houses, of their whole desires possess;

Are often ruin'd at their own request.

Dryden.

Of fortune's favour long possess'd,

He was with one fair daughter only blest'd.

Dryden.

We possessed ourselves of the kingdom of Naples,

the duchy of Milan, and the avenue of France in Italy.

Addison.

Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and possessed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness.

Prior.

4. To fill with something fixed.

It is of unpeakeable advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words, and actions at some laudable end.

Addison.

Those, under the great officers, know every little cate that is before the great man, and if they are possessed with honest minds, will consider poverty

as a recommendation.

Addison.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit.

Beware what spirit rages in your breast;

For ten inspir'd, ten thousand are possess.

Rafcom.

Inspir'd within, and yet possess'd without.

Cleveland.

I think, that the man is possess'd,

Suif.

6. To affect by intestine power.

He's possess'd with greatness,

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride that quarrels at self-breath.

Shakspeare.

Let not your ears despite my tongue,

Which shall possess them with the heavest sound that ever yet they heard.

Suif.

Possess with rumours full of idle dreams,

Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear,

Shakspeare.

What fury, O son,

Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart

Against thy father's head?

Milton.

With the rage of all their race possess,

Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest.

Pope.

POSSESSION. n. f. [possession, Fr. possession,

Latin.]

1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession.

Ecclesiasticus.

In possession such, not only of right,

I call you.

Milton.

2. The thing possessed.

Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth.

Temple.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possession.

Locke.

3. Madness caused by the internal operation of an unclean spirit.

To POSSESSION. v. a. To invest with property. Obsolete.

Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred pos- session and possession.

Carew.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [from possession.]

Master; one that has the power or property of any thing.

They were people, whom having been of old freemen and possessors, the Lacedaemonians had conquered.

Solway

POSSESSIVE. adj. [possessive, Lat.] Having possession.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [possessor, Lat. possessor, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell

Receive thy new possessor.

Milton.

A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possession of them.

Stillingsfleet.

'Twas the interest of those, who'd bluffed after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors in as vile colours as they could.

Asterbury.

Think of the happiness of the prophets and apostles, saints and martyrs, who are now rejoicing in the presence of God, and see themselves possessors of eternal glory.

Far

POSSESSORY. adj. [possessoire, Fr. from possess.] Having possession.

This he detains from the ivy much against his will; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof.

Howel

POSSET. n. f. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a sea-

Shakspeare.

coal fire.

In came the bridemaids with the posset.

Smoking

The bridegroom sat in light.

I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale, and pearl julep.

Hijman.

A sparing diet did her health assure;

Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure.

Dryden.

The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which altho roots are boiled.

Ployer.

Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset drink.

Abraham.

To POSSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle; as milk with acids.

Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The nat'ral gates and allies of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset

And curd, like eager droppings into ink,

The thin and wholesome blood.

Shakspeare.

POSSIBILITY. n. f. [possibilitè, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need to requir'd, the sale of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error.

Hooker.

Brother, speak with possibilities.

And do not break into these worst extremes

Shak.

When we have for the proof of any thing some of the highest kinds of evidence, in this case it is not the suggestion of a mere possibility that the thing may be otherwise, that ought to be any sufficient cause of doubting.

Wilkins.

Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection.

South.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be,

is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not.

Tillotson.

According to the multifariousness of this mota-bility, so are the possibilities of being.

Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation.

Rogers.

POSSIBLE. adj. [possible, Fr. possibilis,

Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient.

Whitgift.

With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible.

Matthew.

All things are possible to him that believeth.

Mark.

Thus we submit, but possible to swerve.

Milton.

He may not stay within doors, for fear the house should fall upon him, for that is possible: nor must he go out, lest the next man that meets him should kill him, for that is also possible.

Wilkins.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification.

Locke.

Set a pleasure tempting, and the hand of the Almighty visibly prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law.

Locke.

POSSIBLY. adv. [from possible.]

1. By any power really existing.

Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend whatsoever may be easily known to belong to the duty of all men, but even whatsoever may possibly be known to be of that quality.

Hooker.

Can we possibly his love desert?

Milton.

2. Perhaps; without absurdity.

Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first Clarendon.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad

sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority encountered by laws.

Addison.

POST. n. f. [poste, Fr. equus positus cursor.]

1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier.

In certain places there be always fresh posts to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other.

Abbot.

These I'll rake up, the post unqualified

Of monstrous lechers.

Shakspeare.

I fear my Julia would not deign my laces.

Receiving them by such a worthless post.

A cripple in the way out-travels a footman, or a post out of the way.

Ben Jonson.

I send you the fair copy of the poem on dulcets, which I should not care to hazard by the common post.

Pope.

2. Quick course or manner of travelling.

This is the sense in which it is taken;

but the expression seems elliptical: to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride

in the manner of a post; courir en poste;

whence Shakspeare, to ride in post.

I brought my master news of Juliet's death,

And then in post he came from Mantua

To this late monument.

Romeo and Juliet.

Sent from Meina post to Egypt.

Milton.

He who rides post through an unknown country, can distinguish the situation of places.

Dryden.

3. [poste, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation;

seat.

The waterwise every where upon the surface of the earth, which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit.

Burnet.

4. Military station.

See before the gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post?

Dryden.

As I watch'd the gates,

Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd

From Cæsar's camp

Addison.

Whatever spirit, or arch of his charge,

His post neglects, or leaves the bar at large,

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my late conveyers. Addison.
Certum laws, by sufferers thought unjust,
Deny'd all profit of profit or of trust. Pope.

Many thousands there are, who determine the office or madness of national administrators, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts.

6. [postis, Lat.] A piece of timber set erect.

The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper posts of the house. Ezra.

For trees, cyresses, and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fitted for posts or pillars. Watson.

Post is equivocal, it is a piece of timber, or a swift messenger. Watts.

To POST. v. n. [postis, Fr. from the noun.]
To travel with speed.

I posted day and night to meet you. Shakespeare.
Will you presently take horse with him,
And will all speed post with him towards the north?

Shakespeare.
Post speedily to my lord, your husband,
Shew him this letter. Shakespeare.

Molt was ked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incertum sheets Shakespeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,
implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

The Turkish messenger presently took horse, which was there in readiness for him, and posted towards Constantinople with as much speed as he could. Kneller.

Themistocles made Xerxes post space out of Greece, by giving out that the Grecians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships adwath the Hellespont. Bacon.

Thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest. Milton.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day;
At other times we reign by night alone,
And posting through the skies pursue the moon. Dryden.

No wonder that pastorals are fallen into disesteem;
I see the reader already uneasy at this part of Virgil, counting the pages, and posting to the Æneis, Wolfe.

This only object of my real care,
In some few posting fatal hours is hurl'd From wealth, from power, from love, and from the world. Prior.

To POST. v. d.

1. To fix opprobriously on posts.
Many gentlemen, for their integrity in their votes, were, by posting their names, exposed to the popular calumny and fury. King Charles.

On pain of being posted to your sorrow,
Fail not, at four, to meet me. Granville.

2. [postis, Fr.] To place; to station;
to fix.

The conscious priest, who was suborn'd before,
Stood ready posted at the postern door. Dryden.

He that proceeds upon other principles in his enquiry into any sciences, puts himself on that side, and posts himself in a party, which he will not quit till he be beaten out. Locke.

When a man is posted in the station of a minister, he is sure, besides the natural fatigue of it, to incur
the envy of some, and the displeasure of others. Add.

3. To register methodically; to transcribe from one book into another. A term common among merchants.

You have not posted your books these ten years;
how should a man keep his affairs even at this rate? Arbutnot.

4. To delay. Obsolete.

I have not stoppt mine ears to their demands,
Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;
Then why should they love Edward more than me? Shakespeare.

POSTAGE. n. f. [from post.] Money paid for conveyance of a letter.

Fifty pence for the postage of a letter! to send by the church, is the dearest road in christendom. Dryden.

POSTBOY. n. f. [post and boy.] Courier;
boy that rides post.

This genius came thither in the shape of a post-boy,
and cried out, that Mous was relieved. Tatler.

To POSTDATE. v. a. [post, after, Lat. and date.] To date later than the real time.

POSTDILUVIAN. adj. [post and diluvium,
Lat.] Posterior to the flood.

Take a view of the postdiluvian state of this our globe, how it hath stood for these last four thousand years. Woodward.

POSTDILUVIAN. n. f. [post and diluvium,
Lat.] One that lived since the flood.

The antediluvians lived a thousand years, and as for the age of the postdiluvians for some centuries, the annals of Phoenicia, Egypt, and China, are with the times of the torrid history. Grew.

POSTER. n. f. [from post.] A courier;
one that travels hastily.

Weed sisters hand in hand
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about. Shakespeare.

P O W

It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding, to invent one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways aforementioned. Locke.
 'Tis not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. Addison.

Though it be not in our power to make affliction so affliction; yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it, by a steady view of those divine joys prepared for us in another state. Atterbury.

Strength; motive; force.
 Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies which were at rest; he effects also that natural bodies are able to produce one another occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.

The moving force of an engine.
 By understanding the true difference betwixt the weight and the power, a man may add such a fitting supplement to the strength of the power, that it shall move any conceivable weight, though it should never so much exceed that force which the power is naturally endowed with. Wilkins.

Animal strength; natural strength.
 Care, not fear; or fear not for themselves, altered something the countenances of the two lovers; but so as any man might perceive, was rather an assembling of powers than dismayedness of courage. Sidney.

He died of great years, but of strong health and powers. Bacon.

Faculty of the mind.
 I was in the thought, they were not fairies, and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers drove the grossness of the supposition to a received belief. Shakespeare.

In our little world, this soul of ours
 Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
 Doth use, on divers objects, divers powers;
 And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.

Maintain the empire of the mind over the body, and keep the appetites of the one in due subjection to the reasoning powers of the other. Atterbury.
 The design of this science is to rescue our reasoning powers from their unhappy slavery and arkness. Watts.

Government; right of governing: correlative to subjection.

My labour

One invested with dominion.
 After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matthew.

The fables turn'd some men to flow'rs,
 And others did with brutish forms invest;
 And did of others make celestial pow'rs,
 Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Davies.

If there's a pow'r above us,
 And that there is all nature cries aloud through all her works, he must delight in virtue. Addison.

1 Divinity.

Merciful powers!
 Refrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature gives way to in repose. Shakespeare.
 Cast down thyself, and only strive to raise
 The glory of thy maker's sacred name;
 Use all thy pow'rs, that blessed pow'r to praise,
 Which gives thee pow'r to be and use the same. Davies.

With indignation, thus he broke
 His awful silence, and the pow'rs bespoke. Dryden.

Tell me,
 What are the gods the better for this gold?
 He wretch that offers from his wealthy store
 These presents, bribes the pow'rs to give him more. Dryden.

Host; army; military force.
 He, to work him the more mischief, sent over his other Edward with a power of Scots and Redshanks to Ireland, where they got footing. Spenser.
 Never such a power,
 or any foreign preparation,
 as heaved in the body of a land. Shakespeare.

P O Z

Who leads his power?
 Under whose government come they along? Shakespeare.
 My heart, dear Henry,
 Threw many a northward look, to see his father
 Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain. Shakespeare.

Gazellus, upon the coming of the holla, valiantly issued forth with all his power, and gave him battle. Knolles.

 A lasting and a fearful death to fall
 On him so near us? ... Shakspeare
 Who knew of your ... and coming hither?

Wife states prevent purposes
 Before they come to practise ...
 Before they come to act. Denham
 Unreasonable it is to expect that those who live before the life and condemnation of hereafter, should come up to every accuracy of expression, which long experience afterwards found necessary, to ... the practise, ... the practise, or
 ... the practise. Waterland
PRACTICE. adj. [praxikos; practicus, Lat.]
practique, Fr.]

1. Relating to action; not merely theoretical.
 When he speaks,
 The six a quarter'd libertine, is still;
 And the mute wonder lurks in men's ears,
 To hear his sweet and honied sentences;
 So that the net and practick part of life
 Meet in the mistress to this theorick. Shakspeare Whilst they contend for speculative truth, they by mutual calumnies, forestall the practick.
Government of the Tongue
 True piety without collation toll
 By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham
 2. In Spenser it seems to signify, fly; artful.

She us'd hath the practick pain
 On the false footman, cloak'd with simpleness. Spenser
 Foreto his subtle engines he doth bend,
 His practick wit, and his fair filed tongue,
 With thousand other lights. Spenser
TO PRACTISE. v. a. [praxikos; prati- quer, French.]

1. To do habitually.
 Incline not my heart to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity. Psalms
 2. To do; not merely to profess; as, to practise law or physick.
 3. To vie in order to habit and dexterity.
 At practise'd distances to tinge, not fight. Milton
TO PRACTISE. v. n.

1. To form a habit of acting in any manner.
 Will truth return unto them that practise in her?
Ecclusiasticus
 They shall practise how to live secure. Milton
 Oft have we wonder'd
 How such a rising spirit you could restrain,
 And practise fast over yourself to reign. Haller
 2. To transact; to negotiate secretly.
 I've practis'd with him,
 And found a means to let the victor know,
 That by phox and camphorus he has treasur'd. Addison

3. To try artifices.
 Once a beguilty artifice and arts
 Of promis'd kindness practise on our hearts;
 With exultation blow the passion up,
 She tans the fire without one gale of hope. Grange
 4. To use bad arts or stratagems.
 If you there
 Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
 Might be my question. Shakspeare
 It then doth him any slight distance, he will practise against thee by poison. Shakspeare
 5. To use medical methods.
 I even thought I should try a new experiment, hence, I am used to practise upon others, and as little that others should practise upon me. Temple
 6. To exercise any profession.

PRACTISE. v. n. [from To practise.] Ad- agent
 Here enter'd Pucelle and her practitioner. Shakspeare
PRACTITIONER. n. f. [from To practise.]

1. One that practises any thing; one that does any thing habitually.
 We will, in the principles of the politician, show how little efficacy they have to advance the practitioner in them to the things they assure to. South
 2. One who prescribes medical treatment.
 Sweet practitioner, thy physick I will try,
 That ministers thine own death if I die. Shakspeare
 I had reason'd myself into an opinion, that the use of physicians, unless in some acute disease, was a venture, and that their greatest practitioner practitioner lent upon themselves. Temple

PRACTITIONER. n. f. [from practise.]
 1. He who is engaged in the actual exercise of any art.
 The author exhorts all gentlemen practitioners to exercise themselves in the transitory. Arbuthnot
 I do not know a more universal and unnecessary mistake among the clergy, but especially the younger practitioners. Swift
 2. One who uses any fly or dangerous arts.
 There are some papistical practitioners among you
Walpole
 3. One who does any thing habitually.
 He must be first an execrated, thorough-paced practitioner of these vices himself. South

PRÆCOGNITA. n. f. [Lat.] Things previously known in order to understanding something else: thus the structure of the human body is one of the præcognita of physick.
 Later all knowledge does not depend on certain præcognita or general maxims, called principles, or else these are principles. Locke

PRAGMATICAL. adj. [πραγματικα;
PRAGMATICK. } pragmaticque, Fr.]
 Meddling; impertinently busy; assuming business without leave or invitation.
 No sham to grofs, but it will pass upon a weak man that is pragmatical and inquisitive. L'Estrange Common estimation puts an ill character upon pragmatick meddling people. Gov. of the Tongue
 He understands no more of his own affairs, than a child; he has got a sort of a pragmatical lilly jade of a wife, that pretends to take him out of my hands. Arbuthnot
 The fellow grew so pragmatical, that he took upon him the government of my whole family. Arbuthnot

Such a backwardness there was among good men to engage with an unquiet people, and prag- matical ambitious orators. Swift
 They are pragmatical enough to stand on the watch tower, but who assigned them the post? Swift PRAGMATICALLY. adv. [from pragmatical.]
 Meddlingly; impertinently.
PRAGMATICALNESS. n. f. [from pragmatical.]
 The quality of intermeddling without right or call.

PRAISE. n. f. [prijs, Dutch.]
 1. Renown; commendation; fame; honour; celebrity.
 Best of fruits, whose taste has taught
 The tongue, not made for speech, to speak thy praise. Milton
 Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease
 In costly grots and marble palaces;
 But to poor Bassus what avails a name,
 To starve on compliments and empty fame? Dryden
 2. Glorification; tribute of gratitude; laud.
 He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Psalms
 To God glory and praise. Milton
 3. Ground or rank in of praise.
 Praiseworthy actions are by thee embrac'd;
 And 'tis my praise to make thy praises last. Dryden
TO PRAISE. v. a. [prisen, Dutch.]

1. To commend; to applaud; to celebrate.
 Will God increase his he
 For such a petty trespass, and not praise
 Rather your dauntless virtue? Milton
 We praise not Hector, though his name we know
 Is great in arms; 'tis hard to praise a loss. Dryden
 2. To glorify in worship.

The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen. Luke
 One generation shall praise thy works to another, and declare thy mighty works. Psalms
 They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning praise'd
 God and his works. Milton

PRAISEFUL. adj. [praise and full.] Laudable; commendable. Not in use.
 O! whose high praise, and praiseful bliss,
 Goodness the pen, heaven the paper use. Sidney
 He ordain'd a lady for his praise, Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman

PRAISER. n. f. [from praise.] One who praises; an applauder; a commender.
 We men and praisers of men should remember, that if we have such excellencies, it is reason to think them excellent creatures, of whom we are.
Sidney

Forgive me, if my verse but say you are
 A Sidney; but in that extend as far As loudest praiser. Pen Jonen
 Turn to God, who knows I think this true,
 And aeth oft, when such a heart mislays,
 To make it good; for such a praiser prays. Donne
PRAISEWORTHY. adj. [praise and worthy.]
 Commendable; deserving praise.

The Tronian goddess having heard
 Her blaz'd fame, which all the world had fill'd
 Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
 For her praiseworthy workmanship to yield. Spenser

Since men have left to do praiseworthy things,
 Most think all praiseworthy things; but truth brings
 That sound, and that authority with her name.
 As to be mis'd by her is only fame. Ben Jonen Firmus, who seized upon Egypt, was so far praise- worthy, that he encouraged trade. Arbuthnot

PRAME. n. f. A flat-bottomed boat. Bailey
TO PRANCE. v. a. [pronken, Dutch, to set one's self to show.]

1. To spring and bound in high mettle.
 Here's no luscious mask, nor dance,
 But of our kids that ink and prance;
 Nor wars are seen,
 Unless upon the green
 Two harlequin laubs are butting one the other. Hutch

With mud fill'd high, the rumbling cart draws near.
 Nor rule thy prancing steeds, loe'd character. Gay
 Far be the spirit of the chase from them,
 To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson

2. To ride gallantly and ostentatiously.
 The horses hoofs were broken by means of the prancings, the prancings of these mighty ones. Judge

I see
 Th' insulging tyrant prancing o'er the field, Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in slaughter,
 His horses hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addison
 3. To move in a warlike or showy manner.
 We should neither have meant to eat nor wash fasture to clothe us, unless we could prance about in coats of mail, or eat bread. Swift

TO PRANK. v. a. [pronken, Dutch.] To decorate; to dress or adjust to ostentation
 Some prank their ruffs, and others nicely dress
 Their gay attire. Spenser
 In wine and meats she flow'd above the banks
 And an exact exceed'd her own night,
 In sumptuous tire she joy'd herieth to prank,
 But of her love too lavish. Spenser
 These are tribunes of the people,
 Th' tongues o' th' common mouth: I despise these

For they do prank them in authority,
Against all noble indifference. Shakespeare.

Your high self,
The gracious mark of th' land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and see, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shakespeare.
'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind attracts my soul. Shakespeare.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unallow'd air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, prank'd in reason's garb. Milton.

PRANK. n. f. A frolick; a wild flight;
a ludicrous trick; a mischievous act.
A word of levity.

Lay home to him;
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shakespeare.

Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous and diffusive pranks;
The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakespeare.
They caudled the table to be covered and went for, which was no sooner set down, than in came the harpess, and played their accustomed pranks. Haleigh.

They put on their clothes, and played all shole
pranks you have taken notice of. Addison.
PRANK. n. f. [from prank,] A leek; also a sea weed as green as a leek. Bailey.

To PRATE. v. n. [from praten, Dutch.] To talk carelessly and without weight; to chatter; to tattle; to be loquacious; to prattle.

His knowledge or skill is in prating too much. Tupper.

Behold me, which owe
A moiety of the throne, here standing
To prate and talk for life and honour, 'fore
Who please to hear. Shakespeare.

This fawced justice hath prated to me of the wisdom of his youth, and the faults he hath done about Turnbul-street; and every third word a lie. Shakespeare.

After Hammock and the blacksmith had, by joint and several pratings, found tokens of consent in the multitude, they offered themselves to lead them. Bacon.

Oh listen with attentive sight
To what my prating eyes instill! Cleaveland.
What nonsense would the fool thy master prate,
When thou, his knave, can't talk of such a rate? Dryden.

She first did wit's prerogative remove,
And made a fool presume to prate of love. Dryden.
This is the way of the world; the dead will prate of discords in music. Watts.

PRATE. n. f. [from the verb.] Tattle;
flight talk; unmeaning loquacity.

If I talk to him; with his innocent prate,
He will awake my mercy, which he's dead. Shaks.
Would her innocent prate could overcome me;
Oh! what a conflict do I feel. Denham.

PRATER. n. f. [from prate.] An idle
talker; a chatterer.

When expectation rages in my blood,
Is this a time, thou prater? hence, begone. Southern.

PRATTINGLY. adv. [from prate.] With tittle tattle; with loquacity.

PRATTIQUE. n. f. [Fr. prattica, Ital.] A licence for the master of a ship to traffick in the ports of Italy, upon a certificate that the place from whence he came is not annoyed with any infectious disease. Bailey.

To PRATTLE. v. n. [diminutive of prate.] To talk lightly; to chatter; to be trivially loquacious.

I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget. Shakespeare.
What the great ones do, the less will prattle of. Shakespeare.

A French woman teaches an English child to speak and read French, by only prattling to him. Lach.
There is not so much pleasure to be in prattle
as to reason well. Shaks.
His mother's his prattling tongue, had she not him quite.

To forty blackness, from the purest white. Addison.
A little lively rustick, trained up in ignorance and prejudice, will prattle treason a whole evening. Addison.

I must prattle on, as afore,
And beg your pardon, yet this half hour. Prior.
Let credulous boys and prattling nurses tell,
How, if the festival of Paul be clear,
Plenty from lib'ral horns shall flow the year. Oay.
PRATTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.

In a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakespeare.

The bookish theorick,
Wherein the tog'd confus can propose
As masterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldieriship. Shakespeare.

The insignificant prattle and endless garrulity of the philosophy of the schools. Glaucille.

PRATTLE. n. f. [from prattle.] A trifling
talker; a chatterer.

Poor prattler! how thou talk'st. Shakespeare.

Prattler, no more, I say;
My thoughts must work, but like a noiseless sphere,
Harmonious peace must rock them all the day;
No room for prattlers there. Herbert.

PRATVITY. n. f. [from pravit, Lat.] Corruption; badness; malignity.

Doubt not but that sin
Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
And therefore was law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity. Milton.

More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any miserable pravity of nature. Isfrange.

I will shew how the pravity of the will could influence the understanding to a disbelief of christianity. Smith.

PRAWN. n. f. A small crustaceous fish, like a shrimp, but larger.

I had prawn, and borrowed a morsel of vinegar. Shakespeare.

To PRAY. v. n. [Fr. pregare, Ital.]

1. To make petitions to heaven.

I will buy with you, sell with you, but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

Pray for this good man and his issue. Shakespeare.

Ne'er thou, poor the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy sins. Shakespeare.

I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month;
and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer. Shakespeare.

Is my sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. James.

Unskillful with what words to pray, let me interpret for him. Milton.

He that prays, desires not; but sad is the condition of him that cannot pray, happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor.

Thou, Turner, shalt atone it by thy fate,
And pray to be av'nt for peace, but pray too late. Dryden.

He prais'd my courage, prais'd for my success;
He was to true a father of his country.

To thank me for defending e'en his foes. Dryden.

They who add devotion to such a life, must be said to pray as christians, but live as heathens. Law.

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how rash would it be to accuse God of not-hearing your prayers, because you found your disease still to continue. Walc.

2. To entreat; to ask submissively.

You shall find
A canon for that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakespeare.

Pray that in towns and temples of renown,
The name of great Anchises may be known. Dryden.

3. I PRAY; that is, I pray you to tell me, is, a slightly praying of facts of inducing a question.

But I pray, in this medicinal formation, when the foremost was answered to the extremities of the arteries, why it is not break through the membrane?

Sometimes praying is elliptical.
Bernard in spirit, sense and truth abound;
How then what waits but fourfold? thousand pounds. Pope.

To PRAY. v. n.

1. To supplicate; to entreat; to address with submissive petitions.

How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.

2. To ask for, as a supplicant.

He that will pray the benefit of this act, must pay a proportionable number of sentences in the ecclesiastical court. Ashe.

3. To entreat in some way or form.

Praying collegio Antioch, praying Antioch,
And as you go, call on Antioch, Antioch, Antioch,
And praying him with the tribune to come to me. Ben Jonson.

PRAYER. n. f. [from priere, French.]

1. Petition to heaven.

They did say their prayers, and prayed them
Again to sleep. Shakespeare.

O remember! God!

O hear her prayer for them as now for Shaks.
My heart's desire and prayer to God be Shaks.
is, that they might be saved. Ramus.

Unreasonable and absurd ways of life, whether in labour or diversion, whether they consume our our money, are like unreasonable and absurd prayers, and are as truly an offence to God. Barrow.

2. Mode of petition.

The solemn worship of God and Christ is prayer, in many congregations, and instead thereof, an indigested form and conception of external prayer is used. White.

3. Practice of supplication.

Were he a lion and as bold in war,
As he is timid for mildness, peace, and prayer. Shakespeare.

4. Single formula of petition.

He tell to his devotion on that behalf, and made those two excellent prayers which were published immediately after his death. Pell.

5. his now in a Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer
inspired. Milton.

No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers, for the greatest faint have sometimes studied the attainment of the heavenly communion; are devout, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this faint comes and goes. Taylor.

6. Enticely; submissive importunity.

Prayer among us is supposed a more prayer than any the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but his us to receive the things prayed for. Sullivan.

PRAYERBOOK. n. f. [from prayer and book.]

Book of public or private devotion.

Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy edifice. Sh. H.

I know not the name or number of the family which was religious, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Watts.

PRE. [from pra, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [from predico, Lat. pre, dicere, Fr.] To pronounce a public discourse upon sacred subjects.

From that time pre began to preach. Matthew.

Prophets pre of the new Jerusalem. Netemah.

It is evident in the pre preaching at Jerusalem and elsewhere, that the pre preaching of the truth of Christ to them, and the doctrine of re-formation, whole multitude of the saints, and care in.

Divinity would not pass the yard in bloom, the forge of sword, nor preaching to take any preaching

inappreciable value of that which strikes the pains of their own. Delany of Pitty.
As he was sent by the father, to were the apol-the undoubted duty him to preach to the gentle people. Delany of Pitty.
The shape of our cathedral is the proper for our preaching audience, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Grouse.
TO PREACH, v. a.

1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.
The Jews of Thebes had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.
He decreed to commissionate messengers to preach this covenant to all mankind. Huismond.
2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness.

There is not any thing positively notified, but we may properly say it is preached. Hooker.
He oft to them preach'd Catechisms and repetitions. Milton.
Can they preach an equality of birth,
And bid us follow we all began from earth? Dryden.
Among the rest, the rich Galeus lies,
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH, n. f. [præche, Fr. from the verb.]
A discourse; a religious oration. Not in use.
This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREACHER, n. f. [præcheur, Fr. from preach.]
1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Psalms.
You may hear the found of a preacher's voice,
when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.
Here lies a truly honest man,
One of those few that in this town
Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crahan.
2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but Time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.
PREACHMENT, n. f. [from preach.]
A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.
Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent?
Shakspeare.
All this is but a preachment upon the text.
L'Estrange.

PREAMBLE, n. f. [præambule, Fr.]
Something previous; introduction; preface.
How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer? Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gain-sayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.
Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contradictions with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty con-tentments. Watson.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon.
With preambles sweet
Of charming sympathy, they introduce
Their sacred songs, and when raptures high. Milton.
I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryd.

PREAMBULARY, } adj. [from preamble.] PREAMBULOUS, } Previous. Not in use, though not inelegant.
He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambularious unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Druid.

PREAPPREHENSION, n. f. [pre and appre- hend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, beheld them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown.

PREASE, n. f. Prefis; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS. Obsolete.

A ship into the sacred seas,
New-built, now launch we; and from out our press
Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PRESBING, part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.
PREBEND, n. f. [præbenda, low Lat. pre- bende, French.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.
His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St.
Patrick's cathedral. Swift.
2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.
Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PREBENDARY, n. f. [prebendarius, Lat.]
A stipendiary of a cathedral
To him, to principals, to prebendaries. Spenser.
I bequeath to the reverend Mr. Gratton, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-ferret. Swift.

PRECARIOUS, adj. [precarious, Latin;
precaire, French.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another;
held by courtesy; changeable or alien-able at the pleasure of another. No word is more unkindly used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others:
thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard?
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.
Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannical power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.
This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Spectator.
He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers.

PRECARIOUSLY, adv. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.
If one society cannot meet or convene together,
without the leave or licence of the other society;
nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own society, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that society, in a manner, dissolved, and subsists precariously upon the mere will and pleasure of the other. Lefley.
Our scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation and Italian song;
Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
Be jolly warin'd with your own native rage. Pope.

PRECARIOUSNESS, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgment of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp.

PRECAUTION, n. f. [precaution, Fr. from precautus, Lat.] Preventive caution preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of a falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposiit, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resultion. Addison.

TO PRECAUTION, v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be pre-cautioned. Locke.

PRECEDANT/NEOUS, adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for pra- cedant/ceus; precedant/ceus, Latin, cut or flun before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influ-of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedant/ceus, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale.

TO PRECEDE, v. a. [præcedo, Lat. prece-
der, French.]

1. To go before in order of time.
How are we happy, still in fear of harm?
But harm precedes not sin. Milton.
Amis and Pelagius durst provoke,
To what the centuries preceding spoke. Dryden.
The ruin of a state is generally preceded by a universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRECEDENCE, } n. f. [from præcedo,
PRECEDENCY, } Latin.]

1. The act or state of going before;
priority.
2. Something going before; something past. Not used.
I do not like, but yet it does allay
The good precedence.
It is an epilogue of discourse, to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been hid.
Shakspeare.

3. Adjustment of place.
Among the laws touching precedence in Julian divers are, that have not yet been so received every where by custom. Selden.
The consable and marshal had cognizance touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremost place in ceremony.
None sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is small
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more.
The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedence. Hou-
That person hardly will be found,
With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
Yet if another could precedence claim,
My first desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.
Books will furnish him, and give him light as precedence enough to go before a young tollow.
Locke.
Being distracted with different desires, the necessary will be, which of them has the precedence in determining the will to the next action. Locke.

PRECEDENT, adj. [precedent, Fr. præ- cedens, Lat.] Former; going before.
Do it at once,
Or thy precedent tergiverses are all.
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakspeare.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us.
What levity is in youth. Shakspeare.
When you work by the imagination of unacit is necessary that he, by whom you work, have precedent opinion of you, that you can do from things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make his observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year.
Bacon.
The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man. Bacon.

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

PRECEDENT. n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases call but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over,
The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakspere.
No pow'r in Venice

Can alter a decree establish'd;
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And nunny an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. Shakspere.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw
Our right from custom; custom is a law.

Granville.

PRECEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECEP'TOR. n. f. [preceptor, Lat. preceptor, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this preceptor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hemond.

PRECEPT. n. f. [precept, Fr. preceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction. The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

PRECEPTIAL. adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. Not in use.

Meu.

Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm each with art, and agony with words. Shakspere.

PRECEPTIVE. adj. [preceptivus, Latin; from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

As the precepts part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECEPTOR. n. f. [preceptor, Latin; preceptor, French.] A teacher; a tutor.

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.

It was to thee, great Stagyrito, unknown,
And thy preceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.

PRECEDITION. n. f. [from precedo, præcedus, Lat.] The act of going before.

VOL. II.

PRECINCT. n. f. [præcinctus, Lat.] Outward limit; boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholic church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

This is the manner of God's dealing with those that have lived within the precincts of the church; they shall be condemned for the very want of true faith and repentance. Perkins.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way

Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light, Directly towards the new created world. Milton.

PRECIOUSITY. n. f. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.
2. Any thing of high price. Not used in either sense.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to count their preciousities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown.
Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciousities. Mor.

PRECIOUS. adj. [precieus, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.
Many things, which are most precious, are neglected, only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave taking? Shakspere.

I never saw
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor luck. Shakspere.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Spectator.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.

More of the same kind, concerning these precious saints amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della Valle. Locke.

PRECIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.

2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRECIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precious.]

Valuableness; worth; price.

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.

PRECIPICE. n. f. [precipitum, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakspere.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

I ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads into the dead. Sandys.

No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then show your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECIPITANCE. } n. f. [from precipitant.]

PRECIPITANCY. } Rush haste; headlong hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glouville.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, loit the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glouville.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or falling of flars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Swift.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Botta.

PRECIPITANT. adj. [precipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause,
Downright into the world's first region throws
His flight precipitant. Milton.

The birds heedless while they strain
Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead
O'er takes their speed; they leave their little lives
Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.

2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.

Should he return, that troop to blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
And curse their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.

3. Rashly hurried.

The commotions in London were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.

PRECIPITANTLY. adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.

TO PRECIPITATE. v. a. [precipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To throw headlong.

She had a king to her son-in-law, yet was, upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery. Bacon.

See vengeance
Precipitate thee with augmented pain. Milton.

They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, lying about him with strings many great fowls. Wilkins.

The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light, Herself involved in clouds, precipitates her flight. Dryden.

2. To urge on violently.

The virgin from the ground
Upstarting fresh, already clod'd the wound,

3. To hasten unexpectedly.

Short intermittent and swift recurrent fits do precipitate patients into consumptions. Harey.

4. To hurry blindly or rashly.

As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well, but if they be daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. Bacon.

Dear Erythra, let not such blind fury
Precipitate your thoughts, nor let them working,
Till time shall lend them better means Than lost complaints. Denham.

5. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.

Gold endures a vehement fire long without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew.

TO PRECIPITATE. v. n.

1. To fall headlong.

Hadst thou been caught but gold'sner feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst silver like an egg. Shakspere.

2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment in chymistry.

By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.

3. To hasten without just preparation.

Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the other side did their forces increase, which might have led him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECIPITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.

Barcebus saith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen so precipitately, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.

When the full stores their ancient bounds did drain, Precipitate the furious torrent flows; In vain would speed avoid, of strength oppose. Prior.

2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.

The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.

3. Hasty; violent.

Mr. Gay died of a mortification of the bowels; 'twas the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Arbuthnot.

PRECIPITATE. n.f. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.

As the elixir separated, I rubbed the super-exercise with the vitriol stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wijman.

PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.

2. Hastily; in blind hurry.

It may happen to those who vent pride or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he sinks, precipitately dull. Pope.

PRECIPITATION. n.f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.

Let them pile ten hills on the Turian rock, That the precipitation might down-stretch Below the beam of light, yet will I still Be this to them. Shakespeare.

2. Violent motion downward.

That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation, and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.

Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those suppositions changes. Woodward.

4. In chymistry, subdency: contrary to sublimation.

Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward.

PRECIPITOUS. adj. [precipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.

Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. King Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.

Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most defected by the way. Brown.

How precious this time is, how precious the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Eccles.

3. Rash; heady.

Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our simple hold, Advice unsate, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. precisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.

Means more durable to preserve the laws of God

from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker.

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of nine honour precise. Shakespeare.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask further time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top

Of speculation; for the hour precise

Exacts our parting. Milton.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbuthnot.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The railery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker.

It knows,

He cannot so precisely weed this land

As his misdoubts present occasion, His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shaks.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Wolt.

In his tract my wary feet have slept, His undeclosed ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Holder.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECISENESS. n.f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to sever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degree of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECISIAN. n.f. [from precise.]

1. One who limits or restrains.

Though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakespeare.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.

These men, for all the world, like our precisians be, Who for sound crows or faint they in the window see, Will pluck down all the church. Drayton.

A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watts.

PRECISION. n.f. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I am unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from precise, Latin.]

Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precise abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

TO PRECLUDE. v. a. [præcludo, Latin.]

To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [precocius, Lat. precocius, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in most parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY. n.f. [from precocious.] Ripeness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore those infectious southern air did blast him. Hovel.

TO PRECOGITE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.]

To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n.f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCIT. n.f. [pre and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their mistaken preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

TO PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [pre and conceive.]

To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of care, defective. Glauville.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South.

PRECONCEPTION. n.f. [pre und conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth; according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewell.

PRECONTRACT. n.f. [pre and contract.]

This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract; To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakespeare.

TO PRECONTRACT. v. a. [pre und contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECURSE. n.f. [from præcurro, Latin.] Forerunning.

The like precursor of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shak.
PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. præcur- ſor, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Joe's lightnings, the precursers
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakespeare.

This contagion might have been preſaged upon conſideration of its precursers, viz. a rude winter, and a cloſe, ſulphurous and fiery air. Harvey.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDACIOUS. adj. [from præda, Latin.] Living by prey.

As thoſe are endowed with poiſon, becauſe they are predacious; ſo theſe need it not, becauſe their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without conteſt. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practiſing plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.

Surmatia, laſt by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and fought relief in vain.

PREDATORY. adj. [prædatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

1. Plundering; practiſing rapine.
The king called his parliament, where he exaggerated the malice and the cruel predatory war made by Scotland. Bacon.

2. Hungry; preying; rapacious; ravenous.

The evils that come of exceſſive are, that it maketh
the ſpirits more hot and predatory. Bacon.

PREDCEASED. adj. [pre and deceſſed.]
Dead before.

Will you mock at an ancient tradition, began upon an honourable reſpect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predceſſed valour? Shakespeare.

PREDCESSOR. n. f. [predceſſor, Fr. præ- deceſſo, Lat.]

1. One that was in any ſtate or place before another.

In theſe paſtoral paſſimes, a great many days were ſpent to follow their lying predceſſors. Sidney.

There is cauſe, why we ſhould be ſlow and unwilling to change, without very urgent neceſſity, the ancient ordinances, rites, and approved cuſtoms of our venerable predceſſors. Hooker.

It ſeem partial to my predceſſor in the laurel,
the friends of antiquity are not low. Dryden.

The preſent pope, who is well acquainted with the ſecret hiſtory, and the weakneſs of his predceſ-ſor, ſeems relieved to bring the project to its perfection. Addiſon.

The more beauteous Cloſe fat to thee,
Good Howard, envious of Apples' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierc'd thy predceſſor's heart.

2. Anceſtor.

PREDSTIMAN. n. f. [from predſti- nate.] One that holds the doctrine of predſtination.

Why does the predſtiman ſo adventuſouſly climb into heaven, to ransack the celeſtial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with leſs labour he may ſecure an authentic tranſcript within himſelf? Decay of Piety.

PREDSTINATE. v. a. [predſtiner,
Fr. præ and deſtino, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irrevocable decree.

Some gentleman or other ſhall ſcape a predſti- nate ſcarſe face. Shakespeare.

Whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predſtinate
to be conformed to the image of his ſon. Romans.

Having predſtinat us unto the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt to himſelf. Ephesians.

PREDSTINATE. v. n. To hold predeſtination. In ludicrous language.

His ruſt creak he hears,
And picks up his *predſtinat*ing ears. Dryden.

PREDSTINATION. n. f. [predſtination, Fr. from predſtinare.] Fatal decree;
predordination.

Predſtination we can diſſerence no otherwiſe from providence and preſcience, than this, that preſcience only foreſeeeth, providence foreſeeeth and careth for, and hath reſpect to all creatures, and predſtination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their ſalvation properly in the common uſe of divines; or predation, as ſome have uſed it. Raleigh.

Nor can they juſtly accuſe
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predſtination over-ruſ'd

Their will, diſpos'd by abſolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton.

PREDSTINATOR. n. f. [from predſtinare.]
One that holds predſtination or the prevalence of pre-eſta bliſhed neceſſity.

Me, miſe example let the ſtocks uſe,
Their ſad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predſtinators me produce,

Who ſtruggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

TO PREDSTINE. v. a. [pre and deſtine.]
To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with ſecret pow'r this reſtleſs ball,
And bid predſtine empires riſe and fall. Prior.

PREDTERMINATION. n. f. [predtermin- nation, French; pre and determination.]
Determination made beforehand.

This predtermination of God's own will is ſo far from being the determining of ours, that it is diſtinctly the contrary; for ſuppoſing God to pred- termine that I ſhall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in reſpect to God, and not predetermined. Hammond.

The truth of the catholic doctrine of all ages, in points of predtermination and irrevocability, ſtands in oppoſition to the Calviniſts. Hammond.

TO PREDTERMINE. v. a. [pre and deter- mine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We ſee in brutes certain ſenſible inſtincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the ſenſible life. Hale.

PREDIAL. adj. [prædium, Lat.] Conſiſting of farms.

By the civil law, their predial eſtates are liable to ſſical payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the ſervice of divine worſhip, but for profane uſes. Auſtly.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicabile, Fr. præ- dicabilis, Lat.] Such as may be affirmed of ſomething.

PREDICABLE. n. f. [predicabile, Lat.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.

Theſe they call the five predicables, becauſe every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, muſt be the genus, ſpecies, difference, ſome property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, Fr.
predicamentum, Lat.]

1. A claſs or arrangement of beings or ſubſtances ranked according to their natures: called alſo cateqorema or category. Harris.

If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that deſcrip-tion would be allowed by them as ſufficient. Digby.

2. Claſs or kind deſcribed by any definitive marks.

The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainſt all other voice;
In which predicament I ſay thou ſtand'ſt. Shakſp.

How the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this ſubtle king. Shakſp.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predica- ment.] Relating to predicaments.

PREDICANT. n. f. [prædicans, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.

TO PREDICATE. v. a. [prædico, Latin.]
To affirm any thing of another thing.

All propoſitions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term ſtands for, is predicated, of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to ſay that gold is a metal. Locke.

TO PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm; to conpriſe an affirmation.

It were a preſumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect reſemblance of the incomprehenſible perfection of the divine nature, very being itſelf not predicating uni-vocally touching him and any created being. Hab.

PREDICATE. n. f. [predicatum, Latin.] That which is affirmed or denied of the ſubject; as, man is rational; man is not immortal.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the ſubject. Watts.

PREDICATION. n. f. [prædication, Latin;
from predicare.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reaſon from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predications and influence.

1. Locke.

TO PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Latin;
predire, Fr.] To foretel; to foreſhow.

He is always inveighing againſt ſuch unequal distributions; nor does he ever ceuſe to predict public ruin, till his private are repaired.

Government of the Tongue.

PREDICTION. n. f. [prædictio, Lat. pre- dictio, Fr. from predict.] Propheſy; declaration of ſomething future.

Theſe predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Caſar. Shakſp.

The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry ſummers, are good to be known. Bacon.

How ſoon haſt thy prediction, ſeer bleſt!
Meaſur'd this tranſient world the race of time,
Till time ſtand ſtill. Milton.

In Chriſt they all meet with an irrevocable evidence, as if they were not predictions, but alter-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists. South.

He, who propheſy'd the beſt,
Approves the judgment to the reſt;
He'd rather chooſe that I ſhould die,
Than his prediction prove a lie. Swift.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Fore-teller.

Whether he has not been the cauſe of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be diſ-puted. Swift.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [pre and digestion.]
Digestion too ſoon performed.

Predigeſtion, or haſty digeſtion, fill the body full of crudities and ſeeds of diſeaſes. Bacon.

TO PREDISPOSE. v. a. [pre and diſpoſe.]
To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the ſun,
to prediſpoſe, and excite the earth and the ſeeds. Barnet.

Unleſs nature be prediſpoſed to friendſhip by its own propenſity, no arts of obligation ſhall be able to ſubſe the ſecret hatred of ſome perſons towards others. South.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [pre and diſpoſi- tion.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

The diſſeate was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the conſtitution of the air, gathered by the prediſpoſition of ſeaſons. Barnet.

Tunes and airs have in themſelves ſome affinity with the affection; ſo as it is no marvel if they alter the ſpirits, conſidering that tunes have a pre- diſpoſition to the motion of the ſpirits. Barnet.

External accidents are often the occaſional cauſe of the king's evil; but they ſuppoſe a prediſpoſition
of the body. Watts.

PREDOMINANCE. } s. f. [præ and domina;
PREDOMINANT. } Lat.] Prevalence; superiority; ascendancy; superiour influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves, and treacherous by spherical predominance. Shaksp.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affection, or efflu is denominated from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy. Hewel.

The true cause of the Pharisees disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetous-nesses and ambition over their will. South.

The several rays in white light do retain their colorific qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear. Newton.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr.
præ and dominor, Latin.] Prevalent;
 supreme in influence; ascendant.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this was predominant. Hooker.

Foul subordination is predominant,
 And equity call'd your highness' laud. Shakspere.

It is a planet, that will strike
 Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful. Shaksp.

Those helps were outweighed by things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind. Bacon.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
 Rule on the earth; or earth rise on the sun. Milton.

I could show you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them. Swift.

TO PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominer, Fr.
præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail;
 to be ascendant; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord
 Predominate in this fair lady's heart. Daniel.

The gods formed women's souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions. Addison.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour. Newton's Opticks.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may be more allowably predominant. Clarissa.

TO PRELECT. v. a. [præ and elcō.] To choose by previous decision.

PREENINCE. n. f. [preeminence, Fr. præ and eminence.] It is sometimes written,
 to avoid the junction of er, preeminence.]

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epic poetry. Dry.
 Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour. Dryden.

It is a greater preeminence to have life, than to be without it; to have life and sense, than to have life only; to have life, sense, and reason, than to have only life and sense. Wilkins.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superstitious fables which are condemned by revealed religion. Addison.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Arietta's beauty, such as, though Arietta be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence. Sidney.

He touched it as a special preeminence of Junius and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancestors. Hooker.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preeminence, and all the large effects
 That troop with majesty. Shakspere.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in capacity of offices and employments. Hayward.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,
 Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares?
 Painful preeminence! Addison.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongue, no book but the ears of men. Hooker.

Beyond the equator, the southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the north submits his pre-eminence. Brown.

PREENINENT. adj. [preeminent, Fr. præ
 and eminēt.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker
 In goodness and in power preeminent. Milton.

We claim a proper interest above others in the preeminent rights of the household of faith. Spratt.

PREENPTION. n. f. [preemptio, Latin.]
 The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward vi.
 and queen Mary, fought to make use of this pre-emption, but, crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over. Carew.

TO PREEN. v. a. [priimen, Dutch, to dress or prank up.] To trim the feathers of birds, to enable them to glide through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird draws it with its bill. Bailey.

TO PREENGAGE. v. a. [præ and engage.]
 To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

To Cyprius by his friends his suit he mov'd,
 But he was preengag'd by former ties. Dryden.

Not only made an instrument;
 But preengag'd without my own consent. Dryden.

The world has the unhappy advantage of pre-engaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whole direction it obeys. Rogers.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preengage.]
 Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write. Boyle.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements. Glanville.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannul all after-contracts made by guilt. Decay of Piety.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave. Collier.

TO PREESTABLISH. v. a. [præ and establiſh.]
 To settle beforehand.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from pre-establiſh.] Settlement beforehand.

TO PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and existō. Lat.]
 To exist beforehand.

If thy preexisting soul
 Was form'd at first with myriads more,
 It did through all the mighty poets roll. Dryden.

PREEXISTENCE. n. f. [preexistence, Fr.
 from preexist.]

1. Existence before.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth. Burnet.

2. Existence of the soul before its union with the body.

As Simonides has expos'd the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satirized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's preexistence. Addison.

PREEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, Fr. præ and existent.] Existing beforehand; preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them; the workman must be before the work. Burnet.

Blind to former, as to future fate,
 What mortal knows his preexistent state? Pope.

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

PREFACE. n. f. [preface, Fr. præfatio, Lat.] Something spoken introductory to the main design; introduction; something proemial.

This superficial tale
 Is but a preface to her worthy praise. Shakspere.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budes in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep. Peacham.

Heavy'n's high behest no preface needs. Milton.

TO PREFACE. v. n. [præfari, Latin.]
 To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepid father. Spectator.

TO PREFACE. v. a.

1. To introduce by something proemial.

Wherefo'er he gave an admonition, he prefaced
 it always with such demonstrations of tenderness, Tell.

Thou art rash,
 And must be prefac'd into government. Southern.

2. To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense.

I love to wear clothes that are flush,
 Not prefacing old rugs with plush. Cleveland.

PREFACER. n. f. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these six,
 the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better. Dryden.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whosoever will be saved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all,
 I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed. Dryden.

PREFECT. n. f. [præfectus, Lat.] Gover-nour; commander.

He is much
 The better soldier, having been a tribune,
 Prefect, lieutenant, prætor in the war. Ben Jonson.

It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the prefects and viceroys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration. Addison.

PREFECTURE. n. f. [præfectura, Fr. præfectura, Latin.] Command; office of government.

TO PREFER. v. a. [preferer, Fr. præfero,
Latin.]

1. To regard more than another.

With brotherly love, in honour prefer one another. Romans.

2. With above before the thing postponed.

If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy. Psalms.

3. With before.

He that cometh after mc, is preferred before me,
 for he was before me. John.

It may worthily seem unto you a most shameful thing, to have preferred an infamous peace before a most just war. Knutta.

O spirit, that dost prefer
 Before all temples th' upright heart. Milton.

The greater good is to be preferred before the less, and the lesser evil to be endured rather than the greater. Wilkins.

4. With to.

Would he rather leave this frantick scene,
 And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men? Prin.

5. To advance; to exalt; to raise.

PRE

By the recommendation of the earl of Dunbar, he was prefer'd to the bishoprick of Coventry and Lichfield. Clarendon.

6. To present ceremoniously. This seems not a proper use. He spake, and to her hand prefer'd the bowl. Pope.

7. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit. They flatly disavouch To yield him more obedience or support; And as t' a perjurd duke of Lancaster, Their cartel of defiance they prefer. Daniel.

I, when my soul began to faint, My vows and prayers to thee prefer'd; The lord my passionate complaint, Even from his holy temple, heard. Sandys.

Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses. Collier.

Take care, Left thou prefer to rash a pray'r; Nor vainly hope the queen of love Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.

Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment. Ayliffe.

PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, Fr. from prefer.] Eligible before something else. With to commonly before the thing refused.

The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any unnecessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it. Locke.

Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it. Locke.

Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other. Addison.

Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable. Atterbury.

PREFERABLENESS. n. f. [from preferable.] The state of being preferable.

PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.] In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.

How came he to chuse, a comick preferably to the tragic poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence? Dennis.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [preference, Fr. from prefer.] The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.

It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel. Spratt.

Leave the criticks on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry. Dryden.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action. Locke.

The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollos, Muses, and Pannas, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern music. Addison.

A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul, To see the preference due to sacred age Regarded. Pope.

The Romanists were used to value the latter equally with the former, or even to give them the preference. Waterland.

With to before the thing postponed. This prefers with his soft adjectives, and gives him the preference to Virgil. Dryden.

It directs one, in preference to, or with neglect of the other, and thereby either the continuation or change becomes voluntary. Locke.

3. With above. I shall give an account of some of those appropriate and discriminating notices wherein the human body differs, and hath preference above the most perfect brutal nature. Hale.

4. With before. Herein is evident the visible discrimination between the human nature, and its preference before it. Hale.

5. With over. The knowledge of things alone gives a value to our reasonings, and preference to one man's knowledge over another. Locke.

PREFERMENT. n. f. [from prefer.] 1. Advancement to a higher station. I'll move the king To any shape of thy preferment, such As thou'lt desire. Shakespeare.

If you hear of that blind traitor, Preferment falls on him that cuts him off. Shaksp.

Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain run to preferment or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit. All preferments should be placed upon fit men. L'Estrange.

The mercenary and inconstant crew of the hunters after preferment, whose designs are always seen through. Davenant.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use. All which declare a natural preferment of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown.

PREFERER. n. f. [from prefer.] One who prefers. To PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To show by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from prefigurare.] Antecedent representation. The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as prefigurations of the latter. Burnet.

The variety of prophecies and prefigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.

To PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation. What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which hath there, is under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; things there prefigured, are here performed. Hooker.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day, That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray, And did prefigure here in devout taste, The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Dunne.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here perfectly prefiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

To PREFINE. v. a. [præfinis, Fr. præfinis, Lat.] To limit beforehand. He, in his immoderate desires, prefin'd unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knolls.

To PREFIX. v. a. [præfixo, Latin.] 1. To appoint beforehand. At the prefix'd hour of her awaking, Came I to take her from her kindred's vapors. Shakespeare.

A time prefix, and think of me at last! Sandys.

Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show, He durst that duty pay we all did owe:

PRE

Th' attempt was fair; but heaven's prefixed hour Not come. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish. Because I would prefix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale.

These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them, if there are in nature any such prefixed bounds. Locke.

3. To put before another thing: as, he prefixed an advertisement to his book.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification. In the Hebrew language the noun has its prefix and affix, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clerke.

It is a prefix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown.

PREFIXION. n. f. [prefixion, Fr. from prefix.] The act of prefixing.

To PREFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand. Not in use. If you consider the true cause, Why all these things change, from their ordinance, Their natures and preformed faculties, To monstrous quality; why you shall find, That heav'n made them instruments of fear Unto some monstrous state. Shakespeare.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.] 1. The state of being with young. The breast is encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness. He was sent to school, where his pregnancy was advantaged by more than paternal care and the dustry. Jell.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit waited in giving reckonings. Shakespeare.

This wrought out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of infirmating the grossest reflections under the appearance of admonitions. Swift.

PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. prægnans, Latin.] 1. Teeming; breeding. Thou Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss, And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as some reports, was built of old By Dunne, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

Through either ocean, foolish man! That pregnant word sent forth again, Might to a world extend each atom there, For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for every star. Prior.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating. All these in their pregnant causes mixt. Milton.

Call the floods from high, to rush again, With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence. These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

O detestable passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Arbuthnot.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense. This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cadiz, a knave very valuable! Shakespeare.

Were't not that we stand up against them all, 'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakespeare.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

PRE

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.

6. Fruit; kind. Obsolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakespeare.

PREGNANTLY, adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thousand moral paintings I can show,
That shall demonstrate the quick blows of fortune
More pregnantly than words. Shakespeare.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together.

South.

PREGUSTATION, n. f. [præ and gusto, Lat.]

The act of tasting before another.

To PREJUDGE, v. a. [prejurer, Fr. præ and judico, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the dishonour of the line of York. Bacon.

The child was strong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the physicians do pre-judge. Bacon.

The cause is not to be defended, or patronized by names, but arguments, much less to be prejudged, or blatted by them. Hammond.

The committee of council hath prejudged the whole case, by calling the united souls of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and prejudged thereby.

Ayliffe.

To PREJUDICATE, v. a. [præ and judico, Latin.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial. Shakespeare.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent
Thus to prejudice the innocent? Sandys.

PREJUDICATE, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of casting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepossessed by opinions.

Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from prejudice renders. Brown.

PREJUDICATION, n. f. [from prejudicate.]

The act of judging without examination.

PREJUDICE, n. f. [prejudice, Fr. prejudicium, Lat.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to be fore that which the prejudice is against,
but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon.

My comfort is, that their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice in professors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of preaching to fly, silly people think me an owl for my puns. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury.
This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only because prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word; it were therefore better to use it less: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession.

In some of the following examples, its impropriety will be discovered.

I have not spoke one the least word,
That might be prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person. Shakespeare.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakespeare.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what prejudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addison.

To PREJUDICE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half pillars wanted their expected height, and roots imperfect prejudice'd the light. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to prejudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.

2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Company of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker.

Neither must his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgift.

I am not to prejudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube refus'd, and the empire sav'd,
Say, is the injury of verte retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy softer vein,
To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vicious bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only cure required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not prejudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL, adj. [prejudicial, French;
from prejudice.]

1. Obstructed by means of opposite prepossessions.

'Tis a sad irreverence, without due consideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudicial eye. Holyday.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker.

3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See
PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most prejudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures.

Addison's Guardian.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often prejudicial to us in that it swells the mind with undue thoughts.

Atterbury.

PREJUDICIALNESS, n. f. [from prejudicial.] The state of being prejudicial; mischievousness.

PRELACY, n. f. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ec-clesiastick of the highest order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefice, as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship, an arch-bishoprick and bishoprick. Ayliffe.

2. Episcopacy; the order of bishops.

The prebiter, puff'd up with spiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the low nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themselves protestants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.

3. Bishops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other most judicious men, have especially bestowed their pains about the matter of jurisdiction. Hooker.

PRELATE, n. f. [prelat, Fr. prælatus, Lat.] An ecclesiastick of the highest order and dignity.

It becometh not the person of so grave a prelate, to be either utterly without council, as the rest were, or in a common perplexity to shew himself alone secure. Hooker.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate.

Shakespeare.

The archbishop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, said one day to king Lewis XI. of France; So,
your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke
Charles of Burgundy was slain. Bacon.

Yet Munster's prelate ever be accurst,
In whom we seek the German truth in vain. Dryd.

PRELATAL, adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelates or prelacy. Dia.

PRELATION, n. f. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; setting of one above the other.

In case the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded as in co-partnership, without any prelation or preference of the eldest daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRELATURE, } n. f. [prælatura, Lat.,
PRELATURESHIP, } prælature, French]

The state or dignity of a prelate. Dia.

PRELECTION, n. f. [prælectio, Latin]

Reading; lecture; discourse.

He that is desirous to prosecute these affairs of infidelity, let him resort to the prelections of Faber.

Hale.

PRELIBATION, n. f. [from prælibo, Lat.]

Taste beforehand; effusion previous to tasting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent soul, is a high prelibation of those eternal joys. Mort.

PRELIMINARY, adj. [preliminaire, Fr. pre-limine, Latin.] Previous; introductory;
proemial.

My master needed not the assistance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own unjessick men discovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELIMINARY, n. f. Something previous; preparatory act; preparation; preparative.

The third consists of the ceremonies of the oath on both sides, and the preliminaries to the combat.

Notes on Hud.

PRELUDE, n. f. [prelude, Fr. preludium, Lat.]

1. Some short flight of musick played before a full concert.

My weak essay
Begs a prelude, and points out their pre-

Yong.

2. Something introductory; something that only shows what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppose
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Aeneis, and very well shewed what the poet could do in the description of what was really great.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another.

PRELU'DE. v. a. [preluder, Fr. préludo, Lat.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either fouglier holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to sing by night.

PRELU'DIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous;
introductory.

That's but a preludious bliss,
Two souls pickering in a kiss.

PRELU'DIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Prelude.

This Menelaus knows, expos'd to share
With me the rough preludium of the war.

PRELU'SIVE. adj. [from prelude.] Previous;
introductory; proemial.

The clouds
Softly shaking on the dimpled pool
Precipice drops, let all their moisture flow.

PREMATURE. adj. [premature, French;
pramaturus, Lat.] Ripe too soon; formed before the time; too early; too soon said, believed, or done; too hasty.

'Tis hard to imagine, what possible consideration should persuade him to repent, till he deposited that premature persuasion of his being in Christ.

PREMATURELY. adv. [from premature.] Too early; too soon; with too hasty ripeness.

PREMATURENESS. } n. f. [from prema- PREMATUREITY. } ture.] Too great haste; unreasonable earliness.

PREMEDITATE. v. a. [premeditor, Lat. premeditor, Fr.] To contrive or form beforehand; to conceive beforehand.

Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes.

With words premeditated thus he said.

PREMEDITATE. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themselves they were rude, and knew not so much as how to premeditate, the spirit gave them speech and eloquent utterance.

PREMEDITATION. n. f. [premeditation, Lat.
premeditation, Fr. from premeditate.]
Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for issue of their bodies
To take their rooms ere I can place myself?

Could premeditation for my purpose?

Hope is a pleasant premeditation of enjoyment, as when a dog expects, till his master has done parking of the house.

He amidst the disadvantages of extempore against premeditation, dispelled with ease and perfect courage all the sophisms that had been brought against him.

Veris is not the effect of sudden thought; but this indicates, that sudden thought may be represented in veris, since those thoughts must be higher than there can arise without premeditation.

PREMERIT. v. a. [premeritor, Lat.]
To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had been premerited of them.

PREMICES. n. f. [primis, Lat. premissa,
Fr.] First fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premisses or first gatherings.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.
The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions.

Thus families, like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state.

To PREMI'SE. v. a. [premissus, Latin.]
1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premisseth, and then infers.

I premise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.
O let the vile world end,
And the premisses flames of the last day
Kneel earth and heav'n together!

PREMISES. n. f. [premissa, Lat. premisses,
French.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premisses, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people.

This is to regular an inference, that whilst the premisses stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion.

She study'd well the point, and found
Her foes conclusions were not sound,
From premisses erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought.

2. In law language, houses or lands: as, I was upon the premisses.

PREMISS. n. f. [premissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition. This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion.

PREMIUM. n. f. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.
No body cares to make loans upon a new project;
whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run.

People were tempted to lend, by great premi- ums and large interest; and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money.

To PREMIONISH. v. a. [præmonico, Lat.]
To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMONISHMENT. n. f. [from premonish.]
Previous information.

After these premonishments, I will come to the comparison itself.

PREMONITION. n. f. [from premonish.]
Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly premonitions have been spent
On your forbearance, and their vain event.

How great the force of such an erroneous pre- monition is, we may collect from our Saviour's pre- monition to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service.

PREMONITORY. adj. [from pre and monere,
Lat.] Previously advising.

To PREMUNSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstro, Lat.] To show beforehand.

PREMUNIRE. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premunire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for premonice.

2. A penalty to incur.

Woolsey incurred a premunire, forfeited his behaviour, estate, and life, which he ended in great calamity.

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low ungrammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [from premunio,
Lat.] An anticipation of objection.

To PREMUNIMATE. v. a. [præ and munio, Latin.] To forename.

He you would found,
Having ever seen, in the premunimate crimes,
The youth, you breathe of, guilty.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [præ and munio, Latin.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the premu- nation; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea.

PRENOTION. n. f. [prenotion, Fr. præ and nosco, Lat.] Foreknowledge; prescience.

The hedgehog's pretension of winds is so exact, that it stoppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto prenotation of these winds ensuing.

PRENTICE. n. f. [contracted by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees
he would be even with me.

PRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from prentice.]
The servitude of an apprentice.

He serv'd a prentice up, who sets up shop,
Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor his drop.

PRENUNCIATION. n. f. [prænuncio, Lat.]
The act of telling before.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. f. [from preoccupate.]
The act of taking possession before another.

To PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupar,
Fr. preoccupo, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.
Honour aspires to death, grief flies to it; and fear preoccupieth it.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prejudices.
That the model be plain without colours, lest the eye preoccupate the judgment.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [preoccupation, Fr.
from preoccupate.]

1. Anticipation.
2. Prepossession.
3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it.

To PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess; to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment.

To PREMUNATE. v. a. [præ and munio, Lat.] To prognosticate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to premonite his death.

PREOPINION. n. f. [pre and opinio, Lat.]
Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, restraining from very many things.

To PREORDAIN. v. a. [pre and ordain.]
To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and to demonstrate to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin.

Few souls preordain'd by fate.
The race of gods have reach'd that envied state.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [pre and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtiers
Might stir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordination and first decree
Into the law of children.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.] The act of preordinating.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Latin; préparation, Fr. from préparer.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this.

2. Previous measures.

I will shew what preparations there were in nature for this dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to prefix, with little preparation, upon you.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

With the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, court-like, and learned preparations.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparatif, French; from préparer.] Having the power of preparing, qualifying, or fitting.

Would men have spent tedious days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work?

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparatif, Fr. from préparer.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the instruction.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission. Though he judged the time of sickness an improper season for the great work of repentance; yet he esteemed it a most useful preparative, the voice of God himself exhorting to it.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miseries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparations for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey?

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from preparative.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent. Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.

ceremony.

So ladies in romance assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight. Pope.

6. To favour with gifts. To present, in the sense of to give, has several structures: we say absolutely, to present a man, to give something to him. This is less in use. The common phrases are, to present a gift to a man; or to present

the man with a gift.

Thou spendest thy time in waiting upon such a great one, and thy estate in presenting him; and, after all, hast no other reward, but sometimes to be fined upon, and always to be fined at. South.

He now presents, as ancient ladies do,
That courted long, at length are forc'd to woo. Dry.

erring certainty of his knowledge. South.

TO PRESENTIATE. v. a. [from présent.]

To make present.

The times may be so strong, as to presentiate upon one the act, all that ever it took notice of in time past: the power of fancy, in presentiating any one thing that is past, being no less wonderful, than having the power, it would also acquire the perfection to presentiate them all. Grew.

PRESENTIUM. adj. [presens and facio,
Lat.] Making present. Not in use.

PRESENTIUM. v. a. [from présentifich.]

2. To suppose; to affirm without immediate proof.

Although in the relation of Moses there be very few persons mentioned, yet are there many more to be presumed. Brown.

I presume,

That as my head has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power run'd honour more. Shakspeare.

On you, than any.

3. To venture without positive leave.
There was a matter we were no less desirous to know, than fearful to ask, lest we might presume too far. Bacon.

I to the heav'nly vision thus presum'd. Milton.

4. To form confident or arrogant opinions; with upon before the cause of confidence.

The life of Ovid being already written in our language, I will not pretence to far surpass myself, to think I can add any thing to Mr. Sandys his undertaking.

This man pretences upon his parts, that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand.

5. To make confident or arrogant attempts. In this we fail to perform the thing, which God seeth meet, convenient, and good; in that we pretence to see what is meet and convenient, better than God himself.

God, to remove his ways from human sense, Plac'd heav'n from earth to far, that earthly sight, If it pretends, might err in things too high, And no advantage gain.

6. It has on or upon sometimes before the thing supposed.

He, that would not deceive himself, ought to build his hypothesis on matter of fact, and not pretence on matter of fact, because of his hypothesis.

Luther pretences upon the gift of continency.

7. It has of sometimes, but not properly. Pretensing of his force, with sparkling eyes, Already he devours the promis'd prize.

PRESUMPTIVE. n. f. [from presume.] One that presumptive; an arrogant person.

Heavy with some high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwise great delayers do grow intolerable presumptive.

PRESUMPTION. n. f. [presumptus, Latin; presumption, Fr.]

1. Supposition previously formed. Thou hast shew'd us how unsafe it is to offend thee, upon presumptive afterwards to please thee.

Though men in general believed a future state, yet they had but presumptive of the nature and condition of it.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing supposed; with upon. A presumption upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking.

Those at home held their immoderate encroachments of power by no other tenure, than their own presumption upon the necessity of affairs.

3. An argument strong, but not demonstrative; a strong probability. The error and insufficiency of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things, as he hath not enabled them to prove.

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; presumptuousness. Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath; For I am sorry, that with reverence I did not entertain thee as thou art.

It wants a warmer carriage in the thing, Let blind presumption work these tunings.

I had the presumption to dedicate to you a very unfinished piece.

5. A reasonable confidence of divine favour. The awe of his majesty will keep us from presumption, and the promises of his mercy from despair.

PRESUMPTIVE. adj. [presumptif, Fr. from presume.]

1. Taken by previous supposition. We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is a lion, and that a rose.

2. Supposed; as, the presumptive heir: opposed to the heir apparent.

3. Confident; arrogant; presumptuous. There being two opinions repugnant to each other, it may not be presumptive or sceptical to doubt of both.

PRESUMPTUOUS. adj. [presumptuus, French.]

1. Arrogant; confident; insolent.

Presumptuous priest, this place commands my patience.

I follow him not With any token of presumptuous suit; Nor would I have him till I do deserve him.

The boldness of advocates prevail with judges; whereas they should imitate God, who represseth the presumptuous, and giveth grace to the modest.

Their minds somewhat rais'd By false presumptuous hope.

It being not the part of a presumptuous, but of a truly humble man to do what he is bidden, and to please those whom he is bound in duty to obey.

Some will not venture to look beyond received notions of the age, nor have so presumptuous a thought, as to be wiser than their neighbours.

2. Irreverent with respect to holy things. The furs whereunto he talketh, are not presumptuous; but are ordinarily of weakness and infirmity.

Thus I presumptuous; and the vision bright, As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd.

The pow'r incens'd Punish'd his presumptuous pride, That for his daring enterprise the dy'd.

Canst thou love Presumptuous Cete, that builds the tomb of Jove?

PRESUMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from presumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; confidently. 2. Irreverently.

Do you, who study nature's works, decide, Whilst I the dark mysterious cause admire; Nor into what the gods conceal, presumptuously enquire.

3. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour. I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course.

PRESUMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

PRESUPPOSAL. n. f. [pre and supposal.] Supposal previously formed.

All things necessary to be known that we may be saved, but known with presuppositional of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already persuaded.

TO PRESUPPOSE. v. a. [presupposere, Fr. pre and suppose.] To suppose as previous; to imply as antecedent.

In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; the first impediment, which we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things without which we cannot live.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand.

PRESUPPOSITION. n. f. [presupposition, Fr. pre and supposition.] Supposition previously formed.

PRESUMISE. n. f. [pre and surmise.] Surmise previously formed.

It was your presumise, That, in the dole of blows, your son might drop.

PRETENCE. n. f. [prætextus, Lat.]

1. A false argument grounded upon fictitious postulates. This pretence against religion will not only be baffled, but we shall gain a new argument to persuade men over.

2. The act of showing or alleging what is not real; show; appearance.

With flying speed and seeming great pretence Came running in a messenger.

So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accustomed to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or pretence of authority.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince.

I should have dressed the whole with greater cure; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

3. Assumption; claim to notice. Despite not these low ensuing pages; for none was any thing of this pretence more ingeniously imparted.

4. Claim true or false. Spirits on our just pretences arm'd Fell with us.

O worthy not of liberty alone, Too mean pretence, but honour.

Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inheriting property or power.

5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify. I have conceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own peevish curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness.

In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulged pretence I fight Of treason's malice.

He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

TO PRETEND. v. a. [pretendo, Latin; pretendre, Fr.]

1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere Latinity, and not used; perhaps it should be pretends.

Lucas, to lash his horses, bends Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends.

2. To simulate; to make false appearance or representations; to allege falsely. Thus let him know, Left wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprised. What reason then can any man pretend against religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit, not only of human society, but of every particular person?

3. To show hypocritically. 'Tis their interest to guard themselves from the virtuous effects of pretended zeal, nor is it less their duty.

4. To hold out as a delusive appearance to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.

Warn all creatures from thee Henceforth; lest that too heavily torn, Pretend To hellish falsehood, snare them.

5. To claim. In this sense we rather say pretend to. Chiefs shall be grudg'd the part which the pretend.

Are they not rich? what more can they pretend?

TO PRETEND. v. n.

1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It seldom used without shade of censure. What peace can be, where both to one pretend But they more diligent, and we more strong.

In those countries that pretend to freedom princes are subject to those laws which their people have chosen.

2. To presume on ability to do any thing to profess presumptuously. Of the ground of redness in this sea are we fully satisfied? for there is another red sea, whose name we pretend not to make out from their principles.

PRETENDER. n. f. [from pretend.] One who lays claim to any thing.

The prize was disputed only till you were seen; now all pretenders have withdrawn their claims.

Dryden.

Whatever victories the several pretenders to the empire obtained over one another, they are reckoned on ours without the least reflection. Addij.

The numerous pretenders to places would never have been kept in order, if expectation had been cut off.

Swift.

To put contempt ye vain pretenders fall, The people's fable and the scorn of all.

Pope.

Pretenders to philosophy or good sense grow fond of this sort of learning.

Watts.

PRETENDINGLY. adv. [from pretending.] Arrogantly; presumptuously.

I have a particular reason to look a little pretendingly at present.

Collier.

PRETENSION. n. f. [præfensio, Lat. pretensio, French.]

1. Claim true or false.

But if to unjust things thou dost pretend,

Denham.

They begin, let thy pretensions end. Men indulge those opinions and practices, that favour their pretensions.

L'Estrange.

The common demand that the consulship should lie in common to the pretensions of any Roman is.

Swift.

2. Pretentious appearance. A Latin phrase or sense.

This was but an invention and pretension given out by the Spaniards.

PRETERITNESS. n. f. [from preterit.] State of being past; not presence; not futurity.

We cannot conceive a preteritness still backwards in infinitum, that never was present, as we can an endless futurity, that never will be present; so that though one is potentially infinite, yet nevertheless the other is positively finite; and this reasoning doth not at all affect the eternal existence of the adorable divinity, in whose invariable nature there is no past nor future.

Bentley.

PRETERLAPSED. adj. [præterlapsus, Lat.] Past and gone.

We look with a superstitious reverence upon the accounts of preterlapsed ages.

Glanville.

Never was there so much of either, in any preterlapsed age, as in this.

Walker.

Bacon.

PRETERNATURAL. adj. [preter and natural.] Different from what is natural; irregular.

We will enquire into the cause of this vile and preternatural temper of mind, that should make a man please himself with that, which can no ways reach those faculties, which nature has made the proper seat of pleasure.

South.

That form, which the earth is under at present, is preternatural, like a statue made and broken again.

Burton.

PRETERNATURALLY. adv. [from preternatural.] In a manner different from the common order of nature.

Simple air, preternaturally attenuated by heat, will make itself room, and break and blow up all that which resisteth it.

Bacon.

PRETERNATURALNESS. n. f. [from preternatural.] Manner different from the order of nature.

PRETERPERFECT. adj. [præteritum perfectum, Lat.] A grammatical term applied to the tense which denotes time absolutely past.

The same natural aversion to loquacity has of late made a considerable alteration in our language, by closing in one syllable the termination of our preterperfect tense, as drown'd, walk'd, for drown-ed, walk-ed.

Spenser.

PRETERPLUPERFECT. adj. [præteritum plusquam perfectum, Lat.] The grammatical epithet for the tense denoting time relatively past, or past before some other past time.

PRETEXT. n. f. [prætextus, Lat. pretextus, Fr.] Pretence; false appearance; false allegation.

My pretext to strike at him admits

Shakespeare.

A good conclusion.

He made pretext, that I should onely go

Chapman.

And help convey his freight; but thought not so.

Under this pretext, the means he sought

How pretily the young swain seems to wash

Shakespeare.

The hand was fair before.

One saith pretily; in the quenching of the flame

Bacon.

of a pestilent ague, nature is like people that come to quench the fire of a house; so busy, as one

Locke.

letheth another.

Children, kept out of ill company, take a pride

Locke.

to behave themselves pretily, after the fashion of others.

PRETTINESS. n. f. [from pretty.] Beauty without dignity; neat elegance without elevation.

There is goodliness in the bodies of animals, as

Morr.

in the ox, greyhound and stag; or majesty and statelyness,

as in the lion, horse, eagle and cock; grave

Locke.

awfulness, as in insects; or elegance and prettiness,

as in lesser dogs and most sort of birds; all which

Morr.

are several modes of beauty.

These drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled

Locke.

amongst the creatures, were designed to delectate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or restrain our passions.

Boult.

PRETTY. adj. [præter, finery, Sax. pretto, Italian; prat, prattigh, Dutch.]

1. Neat; elegant; pleasing without surpise or elevation.

Of these the idle Greeks have many pretty tales.

Staley.

They found themselves involved in a train of mistakes, by taking up some pretty hypotheses in philosophy.

Watts.

2. Beautiful without grandeur or dignity.

The pretty gentleman is the most complaisant creature in the world, and is always in my mind.

Cut off the stalks of cucumbers, immediately after Abbott.

their bearing, close by the earth, and then cut a pretty quantity of earth upon the plant, and they will bear next year before the ordinary time. Bacon.

I would have a mount of some pretty height,

Bacon.

leaving the wall of the enclosure breast high. Bacon.

Of this mixture we put a parcel into a crucible,

Abbott.

and tulked it for a pretty while to continue red hot.

Abbott.

A weasle a pretty way off stood leering at him.

L'Estrange.

PRETTY. adv. In some degree. This word is used before adverbs or adjectives to intend their signification: it is less than very.

The world begun to be pretty well stocked with people, and human industry drained those inhabitable places.

Burnet.

I shall not enquire how far this lofty method

Burnet.

may advance the reputation of learning; but I am pretty sure it is no great addition to theirs who use it.

Collier.

A little voyage round the lake took up five days,

While Maribro's crown thus prevails by laud,

Locke.

Britain's was chiefly by Anna's high command,

Reinhold's over the Lhuissan billions rode.

Blackmore.

Thus long could prevail
O'er death and o'er hell,
A conquest how hard and how glorious;
Though fate had fast bound her
With Styx nine times round her,
Yet music and love were victorious. Pope.
This kingdom could never prevail against the united power of England. Swift.

3. To gain influence; to operate effectually.

I do not pretend that these arguments are demonstrations of which the nature of this thing is not capable: but they are such strong probabilities, as ought to prevail with all those who are not able to produce greater probabilities to the contrary. Wilkins.

4. To persuade or induce. It has with, upon, or on before the person persuaded.
With minds obdurate nothing prevaleth, as well they that preach, as they that read unto such, shall still have cause to complain with the prophets of old, who will give credit unto our teaching. Hooker.
He was prevailed with to restrain the earl of Bristol upon his first arrival. Clarendon.

The serpent with me
Persuively has so prevail'd, that I Have also tasted. Milton.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is liker to be prevailed on to enquire after the right way. Locke.
There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

The gulls pray
He would resume the conduct of the day,
Nor let the world be lost in endless night;
Prevail'd upon at last, again he took
The harness'd steeds, which still with horror shook. Addison.

Upon assurances of revolt, the queen was prevail'd with to send her forces upon that expedition. Seyt.

Prevail upon some judicious friend to be your constant hearer, and allow him the utmost freedom. Swift.

PREVAILING. adj. [from prevail.] Pre-dominant; having most influence; having great power; prevalent; efficacious.

Probabilities, which cross men's appetites and prevailing passions, run the same rate: let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.

Save the friendless infants from oppression;
Saints shall assist thee with prevailing prayers,
And warring angels combat on thy side. Rouse.

PREVALENT. n. f. [from prevail.] Prevalence.

Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth. Shakespeare.

PREVALENCE. } n. f. [from prevail, French; prevalencia, low Lat.] Superiority; influence; predominance; efficacy; force; validity.

The duke better knew, what kind of arguments were of prevalence with him. Clarendon.

Others finding that, in former times, many churchmen were employed in the civil government, imputed their wanting of these ornaments their predecessor wore, to the power and prevalence of the lawyers. Clarendon.

Animals, whose forelegs supply the use of arms, hold, if not an equality in both, a prevalence oft times in the other. Brown.

Why, fair one, would you not rely
On reason's force with beauty's join'd?
Could I their prevalence deny,
I must at once be doud and blind. Prior.

Least of all does this precept imply, that we should comply with any thing that the prevalence of corrupt fashion has made reputable. Angers.

PREVALENT. adj. [from prevalencia, Latin.]

1. Victorious; gaining superiority; predominant.

Brennus told the Roman ambassadors, that prevalent arms were as good as any title, and that valiant men might account to be their own as much as they could get. Raleigh.

Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, that I might be occupied in thy words. Psalms.

The same officer told us, he came to conduct us, and that he had prevented the bear, because we might have the whole day before us for our business. Paton.

Nothing engendered doth prevent his meat;
Flies have their tables spread, ere they appear;
Some creatures have in winter what to eat;
Others do sleep. Herbert.

3. To anticipate.
Soon thou shalt find, if thou but arm thy hands,

Their ready guilt preventing thy commands;
Could'st thou some great proportiona'd mischief frame,

They'd prove the father from whose loins they came. Pope.

4. To preoccupy; to preengage; to attempt first.

Thou hast prevented us with overtures of love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.

5. To hinder; to obviate; to obstruct.

This is now almost the only sense.
I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakespeare.

This your sincerest care could not prevent,
Foretold so lately what would come to pass. Milton.

Too great confidence in success is the likeliest to prevent it; because it hinders us from making the best use of the advantages which we enjoy. Atter.

She fees herself the monster's prey And feels her heart and entrails torn away. Dryden.

Pindar, that eagle, mounts the skies, While virtue leads the noble way;
Too like a culture Boileau flies, Where fordid mists rest flows the prey. Prior.
Who sung by glory, rave, and bound away;
The world their field, and human-kind their prey. Young.

1. Ravage; depredation.
Hog in cloth, fox in leather, lion in prey. Shaksp.
Animal of prey, is an animal that lives on other animals.

There are men of prey, as well as beasts and birds of prey, that live upon, and delight in blood. L'Estrange.

TO PREY, v. n. [prædor, Lat.]
1. To feed by violence, with on before the object.

A hound's
Lay conching head on ground, with cat-like watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir: for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead. Shaksp.
Put your torches out;
The wolves have prey'd, and look the gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east. Shaksp.
Jove venom first infus'd in serpents fell,
Taught wolves to prey, and stormy seas to swell. May.

Their impious folly dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

1. To plunder; to rob; with on.
They pray continually unto their saint the commonwealth, or rather not pray to her, but prey on her, for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots. Shaksp.

1. To corrode; to waste; with on.

Language is too faint to show
His rage of love; it preys upon his life;
He pines, he sickens, he despairs, he dies. Addison.

PREYER, n. f. [from prey.] Robbery; devouring; plunderer.

PRÆPISM, n. f. [præpismus, Lat. præpisme, Fr.] A preternatural tension.

Luft causeth a flagrantcy in the eyes and præpism. Bacon.

The person every night has a præpism in his sleep.

PRICE, n. f. [pris, Fr. pretium, Lat.]

Equivalent paid for any thing.

I will buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God, of that which cost me nothing. 2 Samuel.

From that which hath its price in composition, if you take away any thing, or any part do fail, all is damaged. Bacon.

VOL. II.

1. If fortune has a niggard been to thee,
Devote thyself to thrift, not luxury;
And wisely make that kind of food thy choice,
To which necessity confines thy price. Dryden.

2. Value; estimation; supposed excellence.
We stand in some jealousy, lest by thus overvaluing their sermons, they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hawker.

Sugar hath put down the use of honey, inasmuch as we have lost those preparations of honey which the ancients had, when it was more in price. Bacon.

3. Rate at which any thing is sold.
Supposing the quantity of wheat, in respect to its vent, be the same, that makes the change in the price of wheat. Locke.

4. Reward; thing purchased by merit.
Sometimes virtue serves, while vice is fed;
What then? is the reward of virtue bread?
That, vice may merit, 'tis the price of toil;
The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil. Pope.

TO PRICE, v. a. To pay for.
Some shall pay the price of others guilt;
And he the man that made false oaths to fall,
Shall with his own blood price that he hath spilt. Spenser.

TO PRICK, v. a. [præcian, Saxon.]

1. To pierce with a small puncture.
Leave her to heav'n,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Shaksp.

There shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn. Ezekiel.
If she pricked her finger, Jack had the pin in the way. Asbathnot.

2. To form or erect with an acuminate point.

The poets make fame a monster; they say,
Look how many feathers the bath, so many eyes
The hath underneath, so many tongues, so many Voices, the pricks up so many ears. Bacon.
A hunted panther calls about Her glaring eyes, and pricks her listening ears to scout. Dryden.

His rough crest he rears,
And pricks up his predestinating ears. Dryden.

The fiery courier, when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears. Dryden.
A greyhound hath pricked ears, but those of a hound hang down; for that the former hunts with his ears, the latter only with his nose. Grew.

The tuneful noise the brightly courier hears,
Paws the green turf, and pricks his trembling ears. Guy.

Keep close to ears, and those let asses prick;
'Tis nothing, nothing; it they bite and kick. Pope.

3. To fix by the point.

I caused the edges of two knives to be ground truly straft, and pricking their points into a board, so that their edges might look towards one another, and meeting near their points, contain a rectilinear angle, I fastened their handles together with pitch, to make this angle invariable. Newton.

4. To hang on a point.

The cooks slice it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.

5. To nominate by a puncture or mark.

Those many then shall die, their names are pricked. Shaksp.

Some who are pricked for sheriffs, and are fit, set out of the bill. Bacon.

6. To spur; to goad; to impel; to incite.

When I call to mind your gracious favours,
My duty pricks me on to utter that,
Which else no worldly good should draw from me. Shaksp.

Well, 'tis no matter, honour pricks me on;
But how if honour prick me off, when I come on. Shaksp.

His high courage prick'd him forth to wed. Pope.

7. To pain; to pierce with remorse.

When they heard this, they were pricked in their hearts, and said, men and brethren what shall we do? Acts.

8. To make acid.
They their late attacks decline,
And turn as eager as prick'd wine. Hudibras.

9. To mark a tune.
TO PRICK, v. n. [prijken, Dutch.]

1. To dress one's self for show.

2. To come upon the spur. This seems to be the sense in Spenser.

Ere on the plain fast pricking Guyon spied
One in bright arms embattled full strong. Spenser.

They had not ridden far, when they might see
One pricking towards them with hasty heat. Spenser.

The Scottish horsemen began to hover much upon the English army, and to come pricking about them, sometimes within length of their spears. Hayward.

Before each van Prick forth the airy knights. Milton.

In this King Arthur's reign,
A lusty knight was pricking o'er the plain. Dryden.

PRICK, n. f. [pricke, Saxon.]

1. A sharp slender instrument; any thing by which a puncture is made.

The country gives me proof
Of bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their num'd and mortified bare arms,
Limbs, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary. Shaksp.

It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. Acts.

If the English would not in peace govern them by the law, nor could in war root them out by the sword, must they not be pricks in their eyes, and thorns in their sides? Dorset.

If God would have had men live like wild beasts,
he would have armed them with horns, tuks, tallons, or pricks. Bramhall.

2. A thorn in the mind; a teasing and tormenting thought; remorse of conscience.

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches utter'd
By th' bishop of Bayon. Shaksp.

3. A spot or mark at which archers aim.

For long shooting, their shaft was a cloth yard, their pricks twenty-four score, for strength, they would pierce any ordinary armour. Curew.

4. A point; a fixed place.

Now gins this goodly frame of temperance fairly to rise, and her adorned head
To prick of highest praise forth to advance. Spenser.

Pheton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noon tide prick. Shaksp.

5. A puncture.

No wounds were discovered in the place of her death, only two small insensible pricks were found in her arm. Brown.

6. The print of a lure in the ground.

PRICKER, n. f. [from prick.]

1. A sharp-pointed instrument.

Pricker is vulgarly called an awl; yet, for joiners use, it hath most commonly a square blade. Mason.

2. A light horseman. Not in use.

They had horsemen, prickers as they are termed, fitter to make excursions and to chase, than to sus-tain any strong charge. Hayward.

PRICKET, n. f. [from prick.] A buck in his second year.

I've call'd the deer, the prince's kill'd, a pricket. Shaksp.

The buck is called the first year a fawn, the second year a pricket. Mansuond.

PRICKLE, n. f. [from prick.] Small sharp point, like that of a brier.

The prickles of trees are a kind of excrecence;
the plants that have prickles are black and white, those have it in the bough; the plants that have prickles in the leaf, are holly and juniper; nettles also have a small venomous prickle. Bacon.

An herb growing in the water, called lineolis, is full of prickles: this putteth forth another small herb out of the leaf, impated to moisture gathered between the prickles. Bacon.

A fox catching hold of a bramble to break his fall, the prickles ran into his feet. L'Estrange.

P. R. I.

The man who laugh'd but once to see an ag
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles poise,
Might laugh again, to see a jay claw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

The flower's divine, where'er it grows,
Neglect the prickles, and assume the rose. Watts.
PRICKLINESS, n. f. [from prickly.] Ful-ness of sharp points.

I have some private schooling for you both.

Shakespeare.

Fancy retires

Into her private cell, where nature rests.

Milton.

Private, or secret prayer, is that which is used by a man alone apart from all others.

Duty of Man.

Fame, not contented with her broad highway,

Delights, for change, thro' private paths to stray.

Harte.

2. Alone; not accompanied.

3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to public.

When publick consent of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every intire society or body politick overrule all private of like nature in the same body.

Hooker.

He flies

To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,

A private man in Athens.

Shakespeare.

What infinite heartache must kings neglect,

That private men enjoy? and what have kings,That private have not too, save ceremony?

Shakespeare.

Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house.

Peacham.

The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets.

Sunderfon.

Dare you,

A private man, presume to love a queen?

Dryden.

4. Particular; not relating to the public.

P R I

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Dryden.
5. In PRIVATE. Secretly; not publicly;
not openly.

In private grievance, but with a careless scorn;
In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn.

Granville.

PRIVATE. n. f. A secret message.His private with me of the dauphin's love,

Is much more general than these lines import.

Shakespeare.

PRIVATEER. n. f. [from private.] A ship fitted out by private men to plunder the enemies of the state.

He is at no charge for a fleet, farther than providing privateers, wherewith his subjects carry on a pyrrical war at their own expence.

Swift.

To PRIVATEER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To fit out ships against enemies, at the charge of private persons.

PRIVATELY. adv. [from private.] Secretly,

not openly.

There, this night,

We'll pass the business privately and well. Shaks.

And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately.

Matthew.

PRIVATENESS. n. f. [from private.]

1. The state of a man in the same rank with the rest of the community.

2. Secrecy; privacy.

Ambassadors attending the court in great number, he did content with courtely, reward, and privateness.

Bacon.

3. Obscurity; retirement.

He drew him into the fatal circle from a resolved

privateness, where he bent his mind to a retired course.

Watts.

PRIVATION. n. f. [privation, Fr. privatio, Latin.]

1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.

For, what is this contagious sin of kind,

But a privation of that grace within?

Devere.

If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the removal of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Bacon.

So bounded are our natural desires,

That wanting all, and letting pain aside,

With bare privation sense is satisfy'd.

Dryden.

After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, us being only a privation or absence of good.

South.

A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine unlearned; these are privations.

Watts.

2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.

3. The act of degrading from rank or office.

If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation.

Bacon.

PRIVATIVE. adj. [privativus, Fr. privativus, Latin.]

1. Causing privation of any thing.

2. Confisting in the absence of something;

not positive. Privative is in thingswhat negative is in propositions.The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more.

Bacon.

The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life.

Taylor.

PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something.

Silence is only the absence of sound.

PRIV

Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contravert, but very little. Bacon

PRIVATIVELY, adv. [from privative.]

1. By the absence of something necessary to be present.

2. Negatively.

The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosaic observances, external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond.

PRIVATIVENESS, n. f. [from privative.]

Notation of absence of something that should be present.

PRIVET, n. f. [ligustrum.] A plant. Miller.

PRIVILEGE, n. f. [privilegium, Fr. from privilegium, Latin.]

1. Peculiar advantage.

Here's my sword,
Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. Shakspeare.

He went

Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege

Hath omnipresence. Milton.

He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,

Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit. Denham.

Smiles, not allow'd to bend, from reason move,

And are the privilege of human life. Dryden.

When the chief captain order'd him to be scourged uncondemned, he pleads the legal privilege of a Roman, who ought not to be treated by Ketticell.

A soul that can securely death defy,

And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.

The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Locke.

2. Immunity; right not universal.

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakspeare.

TO PRIVILEGE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.

The great are privileg'd alone,

To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.

He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate

To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,

Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,

Onward to-morrow to return to death. Prior.

2. To exempt from censure or danger.

The court is rather deem'd as a privileg'd place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney.

He took this place for sanctuary,

And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakspeare.

This place

Both privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.

3. To exempt from paying tax or imposts.

Many things are by our laws privileg'd from taxes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.

PRIVELY, adv. [from privy.] Secretly; privately.

They have the profits of their lands by pretence of conveyances thrust into their privy friends, who privily send them the revenues. Spranger.

PRIVY, n. f. [privaute, Fr. from privy.]

1. Private communication.

I will unto you in privy discover the drift of my purpose; I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.

2. Confidentialness; joint knowledge; private concurrence.

The authority of higher powers hath force even in these things which are done without their privy, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker.

Upon this French going out, took he upon him,

Without the privy of the king, to appoint who should attend him. Shakspeare.

All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privy of the prince of Orange, concluding that the Kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.

PRIV

3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.

Few of them have any thing to cover their privies. Abbot.

PRIVY, adj. [priv, Fr.]

1. Private; not public; assigned to secret uses.

The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,

Shall seize on half his goods; the other half

Comes to the privy coffers of the state. Shakspeare.

2. Secret; clandestine; done by stealth.

He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bruit of his manly was spread every where. 2 Maccabees.

3. Secret; not shown; not publick.

The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezekiel.

4. Admitted to secrets of state.

The king has made him

One of the privy council. Shakspeare.

'One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom at King Charles I till the restoration, desired to be made a privy councillor. Spectator.

5. Confidential to any thing, admitted to participation of knowledge.

Sir Valentine

This night intends to steal away your daughter,

Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakspeare.

Many being privy to the net,

How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Danth.

He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift.

PRIVY, n. f. Place of retirement; needful house.

Your fancy

Would fill the same ideas give ye,

As when you typ'd her on the privy. Swift.

PRIZE, n. f. [prix, Fr.]

1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize.

Shakspeare.

Though their foe were big and strong, and often brake the ring.

Forg'd of their lances; yet enforce't, he left th' affected prize. Chapman.

I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize.

Dryden.

The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral

as well as ridiculous. Addison.

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us

the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elegance, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors. Lau.

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praise despise;

Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.

3. [prise, French.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots he did send to France,

To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings,

And make his chronicle as rich with prize.

As is the dory bottom of the sea. Shakspeare.

With sunken wreck.

Age that all men overcomes, has made his prize

on thee. Chapman.

He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes

Soon to obtain and long possess the prize. Pope.

TO PRIZE, v. a. [from appraiser; priser,

Fr. apprécier, Lat.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour

Which I would free. Shakspeare.

A goodly prize that I was prized at of them.

Zachariah.

2. To esteem; to value highly.

PRO

I go to free us both of pain;
I prize'd your person, but your crown I despise'd.

Dryden.

Some the French writers, some our own prize;

The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.

PRIZE, n. f. [prizeur, Fr. from prize.]

He that values,

It holds its estimate and dignity,

As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,

As in the prize. Shakspeare.

PRIZEFIGHTER, n. f. [prize and fighter.]

One that fights publicly for a reward.

Martin and Craibe engaged like prizefighters.

Arbutnot and Pope.

In Fig the prizefighter by day delight. Bramston.

PRO, [Latin.] For; in defence of: pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books

pro and con. Clarendon.

Matthew met Richard, when

Of many knotty points they spoke,

And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

PROBABILITY, n. f. [probabilitas, Lat.

probabilité, Fr. from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down to agreeable with sound reason, but some probable they against it might be made? Hooker.

The reason why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their stocks into such foreign countries as they have never seen, and of which they have made no trial, is from the testimony of other credible persons. Willins.

It is a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability, nay, if it does not carry with it an irrefragable evidence, it will go near to debase it to a downright fallacy.

South.

Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds

as fully satisfy a prudent man. Tillotson.

For a perpetual motion, magnetic virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Willins.

Which temper, if they were duly improved by proper studies, and better methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of prize, than are to be found amongst the generality of men. Lau.

PROBABLE, adj. [probable, Fr. probabilis,

Latin.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The public approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

The only reasonable inquiry is, which is of pro- babilities the most, or of improbabilities the least such.

Hammond

I do not say, that the principles of religion are merely probable; I have before asserted them to be morally certain; and that to a man who is careful to preserve his mind free from prejudice, and to consider, they will appear unquestionable, and the deductions from them demonstrable. Willins.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.

They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they convinced, they were hazarded upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South.

PROBABLY, adv. [from probable.] Likely;

in likelihood.

PRO

Distinction betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange.

Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift.

PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Dict.

PROBATION. n. f. [probatio, from proba, Lat. probatio, Fr.]

1. Proof; evidence; testimony.

Of the truth herein,
This present object made probation. Shakspeare.
He was lap't in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakspeare.

The kinds of probation for several things being as much disproportioned, as the objects of the several senses are to one another. Wilkins.

2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.

When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.

3. Trial; examination.

In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, wherewith indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon.

4. Moral trial.

At the end of the world, when the state of our trial and probation shall be finished, it will be proper season for the distribution of public justice. Nelson.

5. Trial before entrance into monastic life; noviciate.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope.

PROBATIONARY. adj. [from probation.]

Serving for trial.

PROBATIONER. n. f. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,
In no ignoble verse;
But such as thy own verse did practise here,
When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.

PROBATIONERSHIP. n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleas'd to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PROBATORY. adj. [from proba, Latin.]

Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were not vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBATUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you express,
That uncall'd Alas will possess
Your house and couch both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted leis
By Banquo's restless spirit:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you shall never see him more;
Take my advice, probation off.
Why do the gods indulge our fears,
Must to secure our rest?

PRO

PROBE. n. f. [from proba, Lat.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.

A round white stone was lodged, which was so fastened in that part, that the physician with his probe could not stir it. Fell.

I made search with a probe. Wijeman.

PROBE-SCISSORS. n. f. [probe and scissors.]

Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.

The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wijeman.

TO PROBE. v. a. [probo, Lat.] To search:

to try by an instrument.
Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom. South.

He'd raise a blush, where secret vice he found;
And tickle, while he gently prob'd the wound. Dryden.

PROBITY. n. f. [probitt, Fr. probitas, Lat.]

Honesty; sincerity; veracity.

The truth of our Lord's ascension might be deduced from the probity of the apostles. Fiddes.

So near approach we their celestial kind,
By justice, truth, and probity of mind. Pope.

PROBLEM. n. f. [probleme, Fr. πρῶβλημα.]

A question proposed.

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon.

Deeming that abundantly confirmed to advance it above a disputable problem, I proceeded to the next proposition. Hammond.

Although in general we understand colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green? Brown.

This problem let philosophers resolve,
What makes the globe from west to east revolve? Blackmore.

PROBLEMATICAL. adj. [from problem; problematique, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.

It is a question problematical and dubious, whether the observation of the sabbath was imposed upon Adam, and his posterity in paradise? White.

I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.

Diligent enquiries into remote and problematistical guilt, leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.

PROBLEMATICALITY. adv. [from problematistical.] Uncertainly.

PROBOSCIS. n. f. [proboscis, Lat.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature, that bears any resemblance thereunto.

The elephant wreath'd, to make them sport,
His lithe proboscis. Milton.

PROCA'IOUS. adj. [procar, Lat.] Petulant; loose. Dict.

PROCA'CITY. n. f. [from procacious.] Petulance. Dict.

PROCATA'RTICK. adj. [προκαταρτικῆς.] Forerunning; remotely antecedent. See PROCATARSIS.

James IV. of Scotland, falling away in his flesh, without the precedence of any procatactick cause, was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey.

The physician esquires into the procatactick causes. Harvey.

PROCATA'XIS. n. f. [προκαταξίς.] The pre-existent cause of a disease, which co-operates with others that are subsequent, whether internal or external; as anger or heat of climate, which bring such an ill disposition of the juices, as occasions a fever: the ill disposition being the immediate cause, and the bad air the procatactick cause. Quincy.

PRO

PROCEDURE. n. f. [procedure, Fr. from proceed.]

1. Manner of proceeding; management; conduct.

This is the true procedure of conscience, always supposing a law from God, before it lays obligations upon man. Steele.

2. Act of proceeding; progress; process; operation.

Although the distinction of these several procedures of the soul do not always appear distinct, especially in sudden actions, yet in actions of weight, all these have their distinct order and procedure. Hale.

3. Produce; thing produced.

No known substance, but earth and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any metal or herby substance. Bacon.

TO PROCEED. v. n. [procedo, Latin, proceder, French.]

1. To pass from one thing or place to another.

Adam
Proceeded thus to ask his heavenly guest. Milton.

His lorus, yet sore, he ties against a tree. Dryden.

I shall proceed to more complex ideas. Locke.

2. To go forward; to tend to the end designed; to advance.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspeare.
These things, when they proceed not, they go backward. Ben Jonson.

3. To come forth from a place or from a sender.

I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. John.

4. To go or march in state.

He ask'd a clear stage for his muse to proceed in Thus violently redress. Anonymous.

5. To issue; to arise; to be the effect of, to be produced from.

A dagger of the mind, a false creation Proceeding from the heat oppress'd brain. Shakspeare.
From me what proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will deprav'd. Milton.

All this proceeded not from any want of knowledge. Dryden.

6. To prosecute any design.

He that proceeds upon other principles, in his enquiry into any sciences, posits himself in a path. Locke.

Since husbandry is of large extent, the particulars out such precepts to proceed on, as are capable of ornament. Addison.

7. To be transacted; to be carried on.

He will, after his four fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day. Shakspeare.

8. To make progress.

Violence
Proceeded, and oppression and sword law
Through all the plan. Milton.

9. To carry on juridical process.

Proceed by process, lest parties break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans. Shakspeare.

Instead of a ship, to levy upon his country a sum of money for his majesty's use, with direct in what manner he should proceed against such refused. Clarendon.

To judgment he proceeded on th' accus'd. Milton.

10. To transact; to act; to carry on an affair methodically.

From them I will not hide
My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton.

How severely with themselves proceed.
The men who write such verse as who can read?
Their own strict judges, not a word they spare.
That wants of force, or light, or weight, or care. Pope.

11. To take effect; to have its course.

This rule only proceeds and takes place, when a person cannot of common law condemn a man by his sentence.

PRO

12. To be propagated; to come by generation.
From my loins thou shalt proceed. Milton.

13. To be produced by the original efficient cause.
O Adam, our Almighty is, from whom All things proceed, and up to him return! Milton.

PROCEED. n. f. [from the verb.] Produce: as, the proceeds of an estate. Clarissa.
Not an imitable word, though much used in writings of commerce.

PROCEEDER. n. f. [from proceed.] One who goes forward; one who makes a progress.

-He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great nor too small tasks; for the first will make him dejected by often failing; and the second will make him a fatal proceeder, though by often prevailings. Bacon.

PROCEEDING. n. f. [procedé, Fr. from proceed.]

1. Process from one thing to another; series of conduct; transaction.
I'll acquaint our dutious citizens, With all your just proceedings in this case. Shakspeare.
My dear love

To your proceedings bids me tell you this. Shakspeare.
The understanding brought to knowledge by degrees, and in such a general proceeding, nothing is hard. Locke.

It is a very mutual proceeding, and I would not have been guilty of it for the world. Arbuthnot.

Clear the justice of God's proceedings, it seems reasonable there should be a future judgment for a suitable distribution of rewards and punishments. Nelson.

From the earliest ages of christianity, there never was a precedent of such a proceeding. Swift.

1. Legal procedure: as, such are the proceedings at law.

PROCELLUOUS. adj. [procellus, Lat.] Tempestuous. Dict.

PROCEPTION. n. f. Preoccupation; act of taking something sooner than another.
A word not in use.

Having so little power to offend others, that I have none to preserve what is mine own from their preception. King Charles.

PROCRITY. n. f. [from procerus, Latin.] Tallness; height of stature.

We shall make attempts to lengthen out the human figure, and restore it to its ancient procrity. Addison.

PROCESS. n. f. [proces, Fr. processus, Lat.]

1. Tendency; progressive course.

That there is somewhat higher than either of these two, no other proof doth need, than the very process of man's desire, which being natural should be frustrate, if there were not some farther thing wherein it might rest at the length contented, which in the former it cannot do. Hooker.

2. Regular and gradual progress.
Commend me to your honourable wife;
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say how I lov'd you; speak me fair in death. Shakspeare.

They declared unto him the whole process of that war; and with what success they had endured. Kneller.

Immediate are the acts of God, more swift Than time or motion; but to human ears Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.

Attends the fatal process of the war. Dryden.
In the parable of the wasteful steward, we have a lively image of the force and process of this temptation. Rogers.

3. Course; continual flux or passage.
I have been your wife, in this obedience, Upward of twenty years; if in the course And process of this time you can report, And prove it too against mine hopes ought, Turn me away. Shakspeare.

VOL. II.

PRO

PROCREANT. adj. [procreans, Lat.] Productive; pregnant.

The temple-haunting martlet does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that heav'n's breath
Smells sweetly here: no jutting frieze,
Nor this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Shakespeare.

TO PROCREATE. v. a. [procreo, Latin; procréer, French.] To generate; to produce.

Flies crossed and corrupted, when enclosed in such vessels, did never procreate a new fly. Bentley.
Since the earth retains her fruitful power,
To procreate plants the forest to restore;
Say, why to nobler animals alone
Should she be feeble, and unfruitful grown?
Blackmore.

PROCREATION. n. f. [procreation, Fr. procreatio, Lat. from procreare.] Generation; production.

The enclosed warmth, which the earth hath stored up by the heat of the sun, assists nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh.
Neither her outside form'd so fair, nor aught
In procreation common to all kinds. Milton.

If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton.
We no other pains endure,
Than those that we ourselves procure. Dryden.
Then by thy toil procure'd, thou food shalt eat.
Dryden.

3. To persuade; to prevail on.
Is it my lady mother?
What unaccustom'd bauc procures her hither?
Shakespeare.

Whom nothing can procure,
When the wide world runs hither, from his will
To wrathe his limbs, and thence, not mend the ill.
Thybert.

4. To contrive; to forward.
Proceed, Salinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all. Shaly.
TO PROCURE. v. n. To bawd; to pimp.

Our author calls colouring, lea forais, in plain English, the bawd of her liter, the design or drawing: she clothes her, dresses her up, the paints her,
the makes her appear more lovely than naturally she is, the procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden.
With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife by her procuring husband sold? Dryden.

PROCUREMENT. n. f. The act of procuring.

a young girl. Spectator.

PRODIGAL. adj. [prodigus, Lat. prodigus, French.] Profuse; wasteful; expensive; lavish; not frugal; not parsimonious: with of before the thing.

Left I should seem over prodigal in the praise of my countrymen, I will only present you with some few verses. Camden.

Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did share the general world beside,
And prodigally give them all to you. Shakespeare.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shakespeare.
Diogenes did beg more of a prodigal man than

PRO

the rest; whereupon one said, see your baseness, that when you find a liberal mind, you will take most of him; no, said Diogenes, but I mean to beg of the rest again. Bacon.

As a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround; now these affairs, now those,
Though prodigal of life, didst die to die
By common hands. Denham.

Here patriots live, who, for their country's good,
In fighting fields were prodigal of blood. Dryden.
The prodigal of soul rush'd on the stroke
Of lifted weapons, and did wounds provoke. Dryden.

O! beware,
Great warrior, nor, too prodigal of life,
Expose the British safety. Philips.

Some people are prodigal of their blood, and others for sparing, as if so much life and blood went together. Bacon.

PRODIGAL. n. f. A waster; a spendthrift.

A beggar grown rich, becomes a prodigal, for to obtaine his former obscurity, he puts on riot and excess. Ben Jonson.

Thou
Ow'st all thy losses to the fates; but I,
Like wasteful prodigals, have cast away
My happiness. Denham.

Let the wasteful prodigal be stern. Dryden.
PRODIGALITY. n. f. [prodigalité, French, from prodigal.] Extravagance; profusion; waste; excessive liberality.

A sweeter and lovelier gentleman,
Fra'd in the prodigality of nature,
The spacious world cannot again afford. Shakspeare.
He that denies covetousness, should not be hid an adversary to him that opposeth prodigality.
Glansville.

It is not always so obvious to distinguish between an act of liberality and act of prodigality. South.
The most severe censor cannot but be pleas'd with the prodigality of his wit, though at the same time he could have wish'd, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

PRODIGALLY. adv. [from prodigal.] Profusely; wastefully; extravagantly.

We are not yet so wretched in our fortunes,
Nor in our wish to lose, as to abandon
A friendship prodigally, of that price
As is the senate and the people of Rome. Ben Jonson.

I cannot well be thought so prodigally thrifty my subjects blood, as to venture my own life.
King Charles.

The next in place and punishment are they,
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Tools, who repining at their wretched state,
And loathing anxious life, suborn'd their fate.
Dryden.

Nature not bounteous now, but lavish grows,
Our paths with flowers she prodigally sows.
Dryden.

PRODIGIOUS. adj. [prodigiosus, Latin; prodigieux, Fr.] Amazing; astonishing; such as may seem a prodigy; portentous;
enormous; monstrous; amazingly great.

If'er he have a child, abortive be it,
Prodigious and untimely brought to light!
Shakespeare.

An emission of immaterial virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it being so prodigious, but that it is constantly avouched by many. Bacon.
It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear day.
Brown.

Then entering at the gate,
Conceal'd in clouds, prodigious to relate,
He mix'd, unmark'd, among the busy throng. Dryden.

The Rhone enters the lake, and brings along with it a prodigious quantity of water. Adams.
It is a scandal to christianity, that in towns where there is a prodigious increase in the number of houses and inhabitants, so little care should be taken for churches. Swift.

PRODIGIOUSLY. adv. [from prodigious.] 1. Amazingly; astonishingly; portentously;

notice to provoke people to obedience of all and every one of these precepts, was prefixed before the decalogue. White.

So glori'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd.

Milton.

This much may serve by way of proem,

Proceed we therefore to our poem. Swift.

Julianus, in the proem to the digest, only prefixed the term of five years for studying the laws. Ayliffe.

PROFANATION, n. f. [profanation, Fr. from

profano, Lat.]

1. The act of violating any thing sacred.

He knew how bold men are to take even from God himself, how hardly that house would be kept from impious profanation he knew. Hecker.

What I saw and what I would, are to your ears divinity, to any others, profanation. Shakespeare.

'Twere profanation of our joys,

To tell the lady our love. Douge.

Profanation of the Lord's day, and of other solemn religious days, which are devoted to divine and religious offices, is impious. White.

All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.

Others think I ought not to have translated

Chaucer; they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation

and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.

2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.

Great men may jest with tannys, 'tis wit in them;

But, in the best, foul profanation. Shakespeare.

PROFANE, adj. [profane, Fr. from præ-

fanus, Lat.]

1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.

Profane fellow!

Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more

But what thou art besides, thou wert too base

To be his groom. Shakespeare.

These have caused the weak to stumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.

2. Not sacred; secular.

The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the same of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new found world. Burnet.

3. Polluted; not pure.
Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things. Raleigh.
4. Not purified by holy rites.
Far hence be souls profane.
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dryden.
- To PROFANE. v. a. [profano, Lat. profanor, French.]
1. To violate; to pollute.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight.
Profaning this most honourable order. Shakespeare.
Pity the temple profaned of ungodly men. Maccabees.
- Foretasted fruit
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common and unhallow'd. Milton.
How far have we
Profan'd thy heavenly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd. Dryden.
How are festivals profaned? When they are not regarded, nor distinguished from common days;
when they are made instruments of vice and vanity;
when they are spent in luxury and debauchery;
when our joy degenerates into sensuality, and we express it by intemperance and excess. Nelson.
2. To put to wrong use.
I feel me much to blame,
So idly to profane the precious time. Shakespeare.
PROFANELY. adv. [from profane.] With irreverence to sacred names or things.
I will hold my tongue no more, as touching their wickedness, which they profanely commit. Epist.
- Let none of things serious, much less of divine,
When belly and head's full, profanely dispute. Ben Jonson.
That proud scholar, intending to erect altars to Virgil, speaks of Homer too profanely. Broome.
- PROFANENESS*. n. f. [from profane.] Irreverence of what is sacred.
Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness 'gainst thy oracle! Shakspeare.
You can banish from thence scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets and their actors. Dryden.
Edicts against immorality and profaneness, laws against oaths and execrations, we trample upon. Atterbury.
- PROFANER*. n. f. [from profane.] Polluter; violator.
The argument which our Saviour useth against profaners of the temple, he taketh from the use whereunto it was with solemnity consecrated. Hooker.
- Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profane of this neighbour-stained fleece. Shakspeare.
There are a lighter ludicrous sort of profaners, who use the scripture to furnish out their jests.
Gourmont of the Tongue.
- PROFECTIO*. n. f. [profectio, Latin.] Advance; progression.
This, with profection of the horoscope unto the seventh house or opposite sign, every seventh year oppresseth living natures. Brown.
- To PROFESS. v. a. [professer, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. To declare himself in strong terms of any opinion or character.
The day should itself profess yours, Shakspeare.
And hille is to do.
Would you have me speak after my custom,
As being a profess'd tyrant to their sex? Shakspeare.
Let no man, that professes himself a christian, keep so heathenish a family, as not to see God be daily worshipp'd in it. Duty of Man.
- Pretending first Wife to fly pain, professing next the spy. Milton.
A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee,
A foe profess to barren chastity. Dryden.
2. To make a show of any sentiments by loud declaration.
Love well your father;
To your professing bosoms I commit him. Shakspeare.

P R O

3. To declare publicly one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.
What, master, read you? first resolve me that.
—I read that I profess the art of love. Shakspeare.
Without eyes thou shalt want light; profess not the knowledge therefore that thou hast not. Ecclesi.
- To PROFESS. v. n.
1. To declare openly.
They profess, that they know God, but in works
they deny him. Titus.
Profess unto the Lord, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord sware unto our fathers.
Deuteronomy.
2. To enter into a state of life by a publick declaration.
But Parbeck, as profess a huntsman and a man,
The wide and wealthy few, nor all his pow'r respects. Dryden.
3. To declare friendship. Not in use.
As he does conceive,
He is dishonour'd by a man, which ever
Profess'd to him; why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Shakspeare.
- PROFESSFULLY*. adv. [from professed.] According to open declaration made by himself.
I could not grant too much to men, that being professedly my subjects, pretended religious strictness. King Charles.
Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans. Dryden.
England I travell'd over, professedly searching all places I pass'd along. Woodward.
- PROFESSION*. n. f. [profession, Fr. from professio.]
1. Calling; vocation; known employment.
The term profession is particularly used of divinity, physick, and law.
I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual. Shakspeare.
If we contumacious with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all professions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.
Some of our profession keep wounds tented
No other one race, not the sons of any one other profession, not perhaps altogether, are so much fea-tered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen. Spart.
This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged.
Watts.
2. Declaration.
A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glanville.
The professions of princes, when a crown is the bait, are a slender security. Lefley.
Most professingly false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift.
3. The act of declaring one's self of any party or opinion.
For by oil in their lamps, and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn profession of faith and repentance, which all christians make in baptism. Tillotson.
When christianity came to be taken up, for the sake of those civil encouragements which attended their profession, the complaint was applicable to christians. Swift.
- PROFESSIONAL*. adj. [from profession.]
Relating to a particular calling or profession.
Professional, as well as national, reflections are to be avoided. Clarissa.
- PROFESSOR*. n. f. [professeur, Fr. from profess.]
1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.
When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon.
The whole church of professors at Philippi to

P R O

- whom he writes, was not made up wholly of the elect, sincere, and persevering christians, but like the net, in Christ's parable, that caught both good and bad, and had no doubt some insincere persons, hypocrites, and temporaries in it. Hammond.
2. One who publicly practises or teaches an art.
Professors in most sciences are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.
3. One who is visibly religious.
Ordinary illiterate people, who were professors, that shewed a concern for religion, seemed much convenient in St. Paul's epistles. Locke.
- PROFESSORSHIP*. n. f. [from professor.]
The station or office of a publick teacher.
Dr. Prideaux succeeded him in the professorship, being then elected bishop of Worcester, Sanderson succeeded him in the regius professorship. Wotton.
- To PROFFER. v. a. [profero, Lat. proferer, Fr.]
1. To propole; to offer to acceptance.
To them that covet such eye-glutting gain,
Proffer thy gifts, and fitter servants entertain. Spenser.
Does Cato send this answer back to Cæsar,
For all his generous cares and proffer'd friendship? Addison.
2. To attempt of one's own accord.
None, among the choice and prime
Of those heav'n-warring champions, could be found
So hardy as to proffer, or accept,
Alone, the dreadful voyage. Milton.
- PROFFER*. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Offer made; something proposed to acceptance.
Basilius, content to take that, since he could have no more, allowed her reasons, and took her proffer thankfully. Steele.
Proffers, not took, reap thanks for their reward. Shakspeare.
- The king
Great proffers sends of pardon and of grace,
It they would yield, and quietly embrace. Daniel.
He made a proffer to lay down his commission of command in the army. Clarendon.
But there, nor all the proffers you can make,
Are worth the hazard which I set to stake. Dryden.
2. Essay; attempt.
It is done with time, and by little and little, and with many essays and proffers. Bacon.
- PROFFERER*. n. f. [from proffer.] He that offers.
Maids, in modesty, say no, to that
Which they would have the proffer'er confute ay. Shakspeare.
He who always refuses, taxes the profferer with indiscretion, and declares his assistance needless. Collier.
- PROFICIENCY*. } n. f. [from proficio, Lat.]
PROFICIENCY. } Profit; advancement in any thing; improvement gained. It is applied to intellectual acquisition.
Persons of riper years, who stocked into the church during the three first centuries, were obliged to pass through instructions, and give account of their proficiency. Addison.
Some reflecting with too much satisfaction on their own proficiencies, or presuming on their election by God, persuade themselves into a careless security. Roger.
- PROFICIENT*. n. f. [proficiens, Lat.] One who has made advances in any study or business.
I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language. Shakspeare.
I am disposed to receive further light in this matter, from those whom it will be no disparagement for much greater proficients than I to learn. Boyle.
Young deathlings were, by practice, made
- PROFICUOUS*. adj. [proficuum, Latin.]
Advantageous; useful.

P R O

It is very proficuous to take a good large dose.
Harvey.

To future times

Proficuous, such a race of men produce,
As in the cause of virtue firm, may fix
Nor throne inviolate. Phillips.

PROF'ILE. n. f. [profile, Fr.] The side face; half face.

The painter will not take that side of the face, which has some notorious blemish in it; but either draw it in profile, or else shadow the more imperfect side. Dryden.

Till the end of the third century, I have not seen a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile, which gives us the view of a head very majestic. Addison.

PROFIT. n. f. [profit, Fr.]

1. Gain; pecuniary advantage.

Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour.
Shakespeare.

He thinks it highly just, that all rewards of merit, profit, or dignity should be given only to those, whose principles direct them to preserve the constitution.
Swift.

2. Advantage; accession of good.

What profit is it for men now to live in heaviness, and after death to look for punishment? 2 Ejfras.
Wisdom that is hid, and treasure that is hoarded up, what profit is in them both? Ecclesiasticus.

Say not what profit is there of my service; and what good things shall I have hereafter. Eccles.
The king did not love the barren wars with Scotland, though he made his profit of the noise of them. Bacon.

3. Improvement; advancement; proficiency.

To PROFIT. v. a. [profiter, Fr.]

1. To benefit; to advance.

Whereto might the strength of their hands profit me? Job.

Let it profit thee to have heard,
By terrible example, the reward
Of disobedience. Milton.

2. To improve; to advance.

'Tis a great means of *profit*ing yourself, to copy diligently excellent pieces and beautiful designs.
Dryden.

To PROFIT. v. n.

1. To gain advantage.

The Romans, though possessed of their ports, did not profit much by trade. Arbuthnot.

2. To make improvement.

Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all.
1 Timothy.

She has profited to well already by your counsel, that she can lay her lesson. Dryden.

3. To be of use or advantage.

Of times nothing profits more,
Than self-esteem grounded on just and right.
Milton.

What profited thy thoughts, and toils, and cares,
In vigour more continu'd, and riper years? Prior.

PROFITABLE. adj. [profitable, Fr. from profit.]

1. Gainful; lucrative.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man, is not so estimable or profitable.
As flesh of mutton, beefs, or goats. Shakespeare.

The planting of hop-yards, sowing of wheat and rape seed, are found very profitable for the planters, in places apt for them, and consequently profitable for the kingdom. Bacon.

Useful; advantageous.
To wait friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shakspeare.

The Jews, thinking indeed that they would be profitable in many things, granted them peace.
2 Maccabees.

What was so profitable to the empire, became fatal to the emperor. Arbuthnot.

PROFITABLENESS. n. f. [from profitable.]

1. Gainfulness.

Usefulness; advantageousness.

P R O

We will now briefly take notice of the profitable-ness of plants for physick and food. More.

What shall be the just portion of those, whom neither the condescension or kindness, nor wounds and sufferings of the Son of God could persuade, nor yet the excellency, easiness and profitableness of his commands invite? Colman.

PROFITABLY. adv. [from profitable.]

1. Gainfully.

2. Advantageously; usefully.

You have had many opportunities to settle this reflection, and have profitably employed them.
Hale.

PROFITLESS. adj. [from profit.] Void of gain or advantage. Not used, though proper.

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest, which concerns him first:
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shakspeare.

PROFLIGATE. adj. [profligatus, Latin.]

Abandoned; lost to virtue and decency;
shameless.

Time feebly all things impairs;
Our fathers have been worse than theirs,
And we than ours, next age will see
A race more profligate than we,
With all the pains we take, have skill enough to be. Houghton.

How far have we
Prophan'd thy heavenly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd to each obscene and impious use,
Whose harmony was first ordain'd above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love.
Dryden.

Though Phalaris his brazen bull were there,
And he would dictate what he'd have you swear,
Be not so profligate, but rather chide
To guard your honour, and your life to lose.
Dryden.

Melancholy objects and subjects will, at times, impress the most profligate spirits. Clough.

PROFLIGATE. n. f. An abandoned, shameless wretch.

It is pleasant to see a notorious profligate seized with a concern for his religion, and converting his spleen into zeal. Addison.

I have heard a profligate offer much stronger arguments against paying his debts, than ever he was known to do against chastity; because he happened to be closer pressed by the bailiff than the parson. Swift.

How could such a profligate as Antony, or a boy of eighteen, like Octavius, ever dare to dream of giving the law to such an empire and people? Swift.

To PROFLIGATE. v. a. [profligo, Latin.]

To drive away. A word borrowed from the Latin without alteration of the sense, but not used.

Lavatories, to wash the temples, head, wrists, and jugulars, do potently profligate men from all the venom. Houghton.

PROFLIGATELY. adv. [from profligate.]

In the profligency or proceedings of their torturer, there was much difference between them. Walton.

PROFLUENT. adj. [from profluens, Lat.]

Flowing forward.

Teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; then who shall believe Baptizing in the profluent stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin. Milton.

PROFOUND. adj. [profund, Fr. profundus, Lat.]

1. Deep; descending far below the surface; low with respect to the neighbouring places.

P R O

All else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound, as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damietta and mount Casius old. Milton.

He hath hither thrust me down
Into this gloom of Tartarus profound. Milton.

2. Intellectually deep; not obvious to the mind; not easily fathomed by the mind:
as, a profound theory.

3. Lowly; humble; submissive.
What words wilt thou use to move thy God to hear thee? what humble gestures? what profound reverence? Duppa.

4. Learned beyond the common reach;
knowing to the bottom.
Nor orators only with the people, but even the very profoundest divines in all faculties, have heichy often, with the best learned, prevailed most. Hooker.

5. Deep in contrivance.
The revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them. Hooper.

6. Having profound or hidden qualities.
Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound. Shakspeare.

And me without myself the seas have drown'd.
Dryden.

2. The abyss.
If some other place th' ethereal king
Possesses lately, thither to arrive,
I travel this profound. Milton.

To PROFOUND. v. n. [from the noun.]
To dive; to penetrate. A barbarous word.

We cannot profound into the hidden things of nature, nor see the first springs that set the rest a-going. Clavelle.

PROFOUNDLY. adv. [from profound.]

1. Deeply; with deep concern.
Why hast thou so profoundly? Shakspeare.
The virgin staid at her father's name,
And heav'd profoundly, conscious of the shame.
Dryden.

2. With great degrees of knowledge; with deep insight.
The most profoundly wife. Drayton.
Domesticum was profoundly skill'd in all the parts of painting, but wanting genius, he had less of nobleness. Dryden.

PROFOUNDNESS. n. f. [from profound.]

1. Depth of place.
2. Depth of knowledge.
Their wars, which did every where else conquer hardness, were with profoundness there over-matched.
Hooker.

PROFUNDITY. n. f. [from profound.]
Depth of place or knowledge.

The other turn'd
Round through the vast profundity obscure. Milton.

PROFUSE. adj. [profusus, Lat.]

1. Lavish; too liberal; prodigal.
In profuse governments it had been ever observ'd, that the people from bad example have grown lazy and expensive, the court has become luxurious and mercenary, and the camp insolent and intemperate. Trenchard.

One profuse and has a due proportion of justice; in which, whilst he lived, his friends were too profuse.
And his enemies to sparing. Addison.

2. Overabundant; exuberant.
On a green shady bank, profuse of flowers,
Penive I lie. Milton.

Oh liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
Profuse of joys, and pregnant with delight.
Addison.

PROFUSE. v. adv. [from profuse.]

1. Lavish; prodigally.
The price of poets, who before us went,
Had a vast income, and profusely spent. Harris.

2. With exuberance.

Then spring the living leeches profusely wild. Thomson.

PROFUSENESS. n. f. [from profuse.] Lavishness; prodigality.

One of a mean fortune manages his store with extreme parsimony; but, for fear of running into profuseness never arrives to the insignificance of him. Dryden.

Profuseness of doing good, a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguished desire of doing more. Dryden.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness, and ends in madness and folly. Attribution.

PROFUSION. n. f. [from profusio. Lat. profusion, Fr. from profuse.]

1. Lavishness; prodigality; extravagance. What meant thy pompous groggies through the empire?

Thy vast profusion to the factious nobles? Rome
2. Lavish expence; superfluous effusion; waste.

He was desirous to avoid not only profusion, but the least effusion of christian blood. Hayward

The great profusion and expence Of his revenues bred him much offence. Daniel

3. Abundance; exuberant plenty.

2. To shift meanly for provisions. A low word.

She went out pugging for provisions as before. Fitzgerald.

PROG. n. f. [from the verb.] Victuals; provision of any kind. A law word.

O nephew, your grief is but folly,

In town you may find better prog. Swift

Spouse t' set up doth in patterns tread it,

With handkerchiefs of prog, like tithers with badget,

And eat by turns plumcake and judge it. Congreve.

PROGENERATION. n. f. [from genero, Lat.] The act of begetting; propagation.

PROGENITOR. n. f. [from progenitus, Lat.] A forefather; an ancestor in a direct line.

Although these things be already past away by her progenitors former grants unto those lords, yet I could find a way to remedy a great part thereof. Shakespeare.

Like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,

Go cheerfully together. Shakespeare.

All generations then had hither come,

From all the ends of the earth, to celebrate

And reverence thee, their great progenitor Milton

Power by right of fatherhood is not possible in any one, otherwise than as Adam's heir, or as progenitor over his own descendants. Locke.

The principal actors in Milton's poem are not only our progenitors, but representatives. Addison.

PROGENY. n. f. [from progenie, old French; progenies, Latin.] Offspring; race; generation.

The sons of God have God's own natural Son as a second Adam from heaven, whose race and progeny they are by spiritual and heavenly birth. Hooker.

Not me begotten of a they herd swain,

But issu'd from the progeny of kings. Shakespeare.

By promise he receives

Gift to his progeny of all that land. Milton.

The babe regenerate from offspring ends;

A golden progeny from heaven descends. Dryden.

Thus shall we live in perfect bliss, and see,

Deathless ourselves, our numerous progeny. Dryden.

We are the more pleas'd to behold the throng surrounded by a numerous progeny, when we consider the virtues of those from whom they descend. Addison.

PROGNOSTICABLE. adj. [from prognosticate.] Such as may be foreknown or foretold.

The causes of this inundation cannot be regular, and therefore their effects not prognosticable like eclipses. Brown.

TO PROGNOSTICATE. v. a. [from prognostick.] To foretell; to foreshow.

He had now outlived the day, which his tutor Sandford had prognosticated upon his nativity he would not outlive. Clarendon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,

I neither will, nor can prognosticate,

To the young gaping heir his father's fate. Dryden.

PROGNOSTICATION. n. f. [from prognosticate.]

1. The act of foreknowing or foreshowing.

Raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him; where he is to behold him, with ties blown to death. Shakespeare.

This theory of the earth begins to be a kind of prophecy or prognostication of things to come, as it hath been hitherto an history of things past. Barnet.

2. Foretold.

He had him forewarn, arming himself in a black armour, as a badge or prognostication of his mind. Shakespeare.

If an only palm be not a fruitful prognostication,

I cannot scratch mine ear. Shakespeare.

PROGNOSTICATION. n. f. [from prognosticate.] Foreteller; foreknower.

The astronomer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather by a direct inversion of the common prognosticators, to let his belief run counter to reports. Garrigue of the Tongue.

PROGNOSTICK. adj. [from prognostique, Fr. prognostique.] Foretelling disease or recovery; foreshowing; as, a prognostick symptom.

PROGNOSTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The skill of foretelling diseases or the event of diseases. This is Agallicism. Hippocrates's prognosticks are generally true, that it is very hard to resolve a small apoplexy. Arbutnot.

2. A prediction.

Though your prognosticks run too fast,

They may be verily d at last. Swift.

3. A token forerunning.

Whatever you are or shall be, has been but an easy prognostick from what you were. South.

Careful observers

By sure prognosticks may foretell a show'r. Swift.

PROGRESS. n. f. [from progrès, Fr. from progressus, Lat.]

1. Course; procession; passage.

I cannot but by the progress of the tides,

Give guess how near to day. Shakespeare.

The moon begins

Her rosy progress smiling. Milton.

The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,

And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies. Pope.

2. Advancement; motion forward.

Through all thy veins shall run

A cold and drowsy humour, which shall freeze

Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep

His natural progress, but turne to bent. Shakespeare.

His motion worketh it round at first, which way to deliver itself; and then worketh in progress, where it finisheth the deliverance earnest. Baron.

Out of Ethiopia beyond Egypt had been a strange progress for ten hundred thousand men. Raleigh.

Whoever understands the progress and revolutions of nature, will see that neither the present form of the world, nor its first form, were permanent and immutable. Barnet.

It is impossible the mind should ever be stopped in its progress in this space. Locke.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress in the endless expansion

Perhaps I judge hastily, there being several, in whose writings I have made very little progress. Swift.

3. Intellectual improvement; advancement in knowledge; pronouncement.

But the wife his progress never ceas'd,

But still his learning with his days increas'd. Dryden.

It is strange, that men should not have made more progress in the knowledge of these things. Barnet.

Several defects in the understanding hinder its progress to knowledge. Locke.

Others despond at the first difficulty, and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, is other than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

You perhaps have made no progress in the important christian virtues; you have learnt half way in humility and charity. Locke.

4. Removal from one place to another.

From Egypt arts their progress made to Greece,

Wapt in the fable of the golden fleece. Dryden.

5. A journey of state; a circuit.

He gave order, that there should be nothing in his journey like unto a warlike march, but rather like unto the progress of a king in full peace. Barnet.

O may I live to hail the day,

When the glad nation shall survey

Their sovereign, through his wide command,

Passing in progress o'er the land. Addison.

TO PROGRESS. v. n. [from progressus, Lat.] To move forward; to pass. Not used.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,

That silverly dath progress on thy cheeks. Shakespeare.

PROGRESSION. n. f. [from progression, French; progressio, Latin.]

1. Proportional process; regular and gradual advance.

The squares of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatic colour, were in arithmetical progression. Newton.

2. Motion forward.

Those worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning, are likely to find a clearer progression,

when to many rubs are levelled. Locke.

In philosophical enquiries, the order of nature should govern, which in all progression is to go from the place one is then in, to that which lies next

it. Locke.

3. Course; passage.

He had fram'd a letter, which accidentally, by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Shakespeare.

4. Intellectual advance.

For the saving the long progression of the thought to first principles, the mind should provide even intermediate principles. Locke.

PROGRESSIONAL. adj. [from progressus.]

Such as are in a state of increase or advance.

They maintain their accomplished ends, and rely not again unto their progression, imperfections.

Barnet.

PROGRESSIVE. adj. [from progressus, Fr. from progressus.] Going forward; advancing

Princes, if they are ambitious men, should handle it so, as they may be said progressive, and not re-grade. Barnet.

In progressive motion, the arms and legs move successively, but in statism, both together. Barnet.

Their course

Progressive, retrograde, or standing still. Milton.

The progressive motion of this animal is made not by walking but by leaping. Barnet.

Ere the progressive course of restless age

Performs three thousand times its annual stage,

May not our power and learning be supplied,

And arts and empire learn to travel well? Pope.

PROGRESSIVELY. adv. [from progressus.]

By gradual steps or regular course.

The reason why they tell in that order, from the greatest effects progressively to the least, is, because the greatest effects denote a greater distance of time before the sun, and consequently a more approach to her conjunction. Locke.

PROGRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from progressus.]

The state of advancing.

TO PROHIBIT. v. a. [from prohibeo, Latin

prohibeo, French.]

1. To forbid; to interdict by authority.

She would not let them know of his close lying that prohibited place, because they would be feuded. Shakespeare.

PRO

The weightiest, which it did command them, are to us in the gospel prohibited. Hooker Moral law is two-fold; simply moral, or moral only by some external constitution, or imposition of God. Divine law, simply moral, commandeth or prohibiteth actions, good or evil, in respect of their inward nature and quality. White

1. To debar; to hinder.

Gates of burning adamant

Bar'd over us, prohibit all egrets. Milton.

PROHIBITER. n. f. [from prohibit.] Forbidder; interdicter.

PROHIBITION. n. f. [prohibition, French; prohibitio, Latin; from prohibit.]

1. Forbiddance; interdict; act of forbidding.

Might there not be some other mystery in this prohibition, than they think of? Hooker.

'Gainst self-slaughter

There is a prohibition to divine,

That craves my weak hand. Shakespeare.

He bestowed the liberal choice of all things, with one only prohibition, to try his obedience. Raleigh.

Let us not think hard

One easy prohibition, who enjoy

Free leave to large to all things else. Milton.

The law of God in the ten commandments consists mostly of prohibitions; thou shalt not do such a thing. Tillotson.

2. A writ issued by one court to stop the proceeding of another.

PROHIBITORY. adj. [from prohibit.] Implying prohibition; forbidding.

A prohibition will lie on this statute, notwithstanding the penalty annexed; because it has words prohibitory, as well as a penalty annexed. Arghe.

PROJECT. v. a. [projicio, projectus, Latin.]

1. To throw out; to cast forward.

The ascending villas

Project long shadows o'er the crystal tide. Pope.

2. To exhibit a form, as of the image thrown on a mirror.

Diffusive of themselves where'er they pass, they make it at warmth in others they expect, their colour works like bodies on a glass.

And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

If we had a plan of the naked lines of longitude and latitude, projected on the meridian, a leather might more speedily advance himself in the knowledge of geography. Watts.

3. [projecter, Fr.] To scheme; to form in the mind; to contrive.

It is as to be comfort, to compel men to assent to whatever tumultuary patrons shall project.

What fit we then projecting peace and war? King Charles.

What desire, by which nature projects its own pleasure or preservation, can be gratified by another man's personal pursuit of his own vice? South.

PROJECT. v. n. To jut out; to shoot forward; to shoot beyond something next it; as, the cornice projects.

PROJECT. n. f. [projet, French; from the verb.] Scheme; design; contrivance.

It is a discovering the longitude, and deserves a much higher name than that of a project. Addison.

In the various projects of happiness, devised by human reason, there appeared inconsistencies not to be reconciled. Rogers.

PROJECTILE. adj. [projectile, Fr.] Impelled forward.

Good blood and a due projectile motion or circulation, are necessary to convert the aliment into audible juices. Arbuthnot.

PROJECTILE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A body put in motion.

Projectiles would for ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the irregularity of the plane stop their motion. Chayne.

PROJECTION. n. f. [from project.]

The act of shooting forward.

If the electric be held unto the light, many particles will be discharged from it, which motion is performed by the breath of the effluvia issuing with agility; for as the electric tookth, the projection of the atoms ceaseth. Brown.

2. [projection, French.] Plan; delineation. See TO PROJECT.

For the bulk of the learners of astronomy, that projection of the stars is best, which includes in it all the stars in our horizon, reaching to the 30th degree of the southern latitude. Watts.

3. Scheme; plan of action; as, a projection of a new scheme.

4. [projection, French.] In chymistry, an operation; crisis of an operation; moment of transmutation.

A little quantity of the medicine in the projection will turn a sea of the baser metal into gold by multiplying. Bacon.

PROJECTOR. n. f. [from project.]

1. One who forms schemes or designs.

The following comes from a projector, a correspondent as diverging as a traveller, his subject having the same grace of novelty to recommend it. Addison.

Among all the projectors in this attempt, none have met with so general a success, as they who apply themselves to soften the rigour of the precept. Rogers.

2. One who forms wild impracticable schemes.

Chymists, and other projectors, propose to themselves things utterly impracticable. Elfrange.

Astrologers that futute fates foretold, Projectors, quacks, and lawyers not a few.

PROJECTURE. n. f. [projecture, French; projectura, Latin.] A jutting out.

TO PROIN. v. a. [a corruption of prune.]

This is a prolepsis or anachronism. Theobald.

PROLEPTICAL. adj. [from prolepsis.] Previous; antecedent.

The proleptical notions of religion cannot be so well defended by the professed servants of the altar. Glover.

PROLEPTICALLY. adv. [from prolepsis.]

By way of anticipation. Clarissa.

PROLETARIAN. adj. Mean; wretched; vile; vulgar.

PRO

Like speculators should forer.

From pharos of authority,

Portended mischiefs farther than

Low proletarian tything men. Nadabres.

PROLIFICATION. n. f. [proles and facio, Lat.] Generation of children.

Their fruits, proceeding from simpler roots, are not so distinguishable as the offspring of sensible creatures, and prolifications descending from double origins. Brown.

PROLIFICAL. } adj. [prolifque, French; proles and facio.] Fruitful; generative; pregnant; productive.

Mam ocean flow'd; not idle, but with warm

Prophetic humour loft'ning all her globe,

Fermented the great mother to conceive,

Satiate with genial moisture. Milton.

Every dispute in religion grew prolific, and in ventilating one question, many new ones were started. Decay of Picty.

His vital power air, earth and seas supplies,

And breeds what'er is bred beneath the skies;

For every kind, by thy prolific might,

Spreads. Dryden.

All dogs are of one species, they mingling together in generation, and the breed of such mixtures being prolific. Ray.

From the middle of the world,

The sun's prolific rays are hurl'd;

'Tis from that seat he darts those beams,

Which quicken earth with genial flames. Prior.

PROLIFICALLY. adv. [from prolific.]

Fruitfully; pregnantly.

PROLIX. adj. [prolix, Fr. prolixus, Lat.]

1. Long; tedious; not concise.

According to the caution we have been so prolix in giving, if we aim at right understanding the true nature of it, we must examine what apprehension mankind make of it. Digby.

Should I at large repeat

The head-roll of her vicious tricks,

My poem would be too prolix. Prætor.

2. Of long duration. This is a very rare sense.

If the appellant appoints a term too prolix, the judge may then assign a competent term. Aspliff.

PROLIXIOUS. adj. [from prolix.] Dilatory; tedious. A word of Shakespeare's coining.

Lay by all uncertainty and prolixious bluntness. Shakspeare.

PROLIXITY. n. f. [prolixité, French; from prolix.] Tediousness; tedious length; want of brevity.

It is true, without any slips of prolixity, or crossing the ploughshare of talk, that the good Anthony hath lost a slip. Shakspeare.

In some other passages, I may have, to shun prolixity, misused slip into the contrary extreme. Boyle.

Elaborate and studied prolixity in proving such points as nobody calls in question. Waterland.

PROLIXLY. adv. [from prolix.] At great length; tediously.

On these prolixity thankful the enlarg'd. Dryden.

PROLIXNESS. n. f. [from prolix.] Tediousness.

PROLOCUTOR. n. f. [Latin.] The foreman; the speaker of a convocation.

The convocation the queen prorogued, though at the expense of Dr. Anchbury's displeasure, who was dignified their prolocutor. Swift.

PROLOCUTORSHIP. n. f. [from prolocutor.]

The office or dignity of prolocutor.

PROLOGUE. n. f. [πρόλογος; prologue, Fr. prologus, Lat.]

1. Preface; introduction to any discourse or performance.

Come, in, and a song.

— Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice? Shakspeare.

In her face excuse

Came prologue, and apology too prompt. Milton.

2. Something spoken before the entrance of the actors of a play.

PRO

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would spend it with all willingness;
But make it only the prologue to their play.

The peaking cornuto comes in the pantant, after we had spoke the prologue of our comedy. Shaksp.
TO PROLOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To introduce with a formal preface.

The prologue is nothing over prologue. Shaksp.
TO PROLONG. v. a. [prolonger, French;
pro and longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen out; to continue; to draw out.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much. Milton.
Th' unhappy queen with talk prolong'd the night. Dryden.

2. To put off to a distant time.
To-morrow in my judgment is too sudden;
For myself am not so well provided,
As else I would be were this day prolong'd. Shaksp.

PROLONGATION. n. f. [prolongation, Fr. from prolong.]

1. The act of lengthening.
Nourishment in living creatures is for the prolongation of life. Bacon.

2. Delay to a longer time.
This unbusiness concerned only the prolongation of days for payment of monies. Bacon.

PROLUSION. n. f. [prolusio, Lat.] Entertainments; performance of diversion.

It is memorable, which Famianus Strada, in the first book of his academical prolusions, relates of Suzer. Hakewell.

nencies* and fallings in of the features. Addison.

PROMINENT. adj. [prominens, Latin.] Standing out beyond the other part;
protuberant; extant.

Whales are described with two prominent spouts on their heads, whereas they have but one in the forehead terminating over the windpipe. Brown.

She has her eyes so prominent, and placed so that she can see better behind her than before her. More.

Two goodly bowls of masty silver,
With figures prominent and richly wrought. Dryden.

Some have their eyes fixed so prominent as the hare, that they can see us well behind us before them. Ray.

PROMISCUOUS. adj. [promiscuus, Lat.]
Mingled; confused; undistinguished.

Glory he requires, and glory he receives,
Promiscuous from all nations. Milton.
Promiscuous love by marriage was restrain'd. Roscommon.

In rush'd at once a rude promiscuous crowd;
The guards, and then each other overbear,
And in a moment through the theatre. Dryden.

No man, that considers the promiscuous dispensations of God's providence in this world, can think it unreasonable to conclude, that after this life good men shall be rewarded, and sinners punished. Tillotson.

The earth was formed out of that promiscuous mash of sand, earth, shells, subsiding from the water.
Woodward.

Clubs, diamonds, hearts, in wild disorder seen,
With throngs promiscuous strow the level green. Pope.

A wild, where weeds and flowers promiscuous shoot. Pope.

ous*.] With confused mixture; indisci-minately.

We beheld where once flood Uim, called Troy
promiscuously of Troas. Sandys.
That generation, as the sacred writer modestly expresses it, married and gave in marriage without discretion or decency, but promiscuously, and with no better a guide than the impulses of a brutal appetite. Woodward.

PRO

Here might you see
Barons and peasants on the embattled field,
In one huge heap, promiscuously amass. Philips.

Unaw'd by precepts human or divine,
Like birds, ad beasts promiscuously they join. Pope.

PROMISE. n. f. [promissum, Lat. promise, promisere, Fr.]

1. Declaration of some benefit to be conferred.

Let the air, promise cramm'd; you cannot feed
capons so. Shakspere.
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he now is, nothing. Shaksp.

O Lord, let thy promise unto David be established. 1 Chronicles.
Duty shall precede promise, and strict endeavour only founded comfort. Fell.

Behold, she said, perform'd in every part
My promise made; and Vulcan's labour'd art. Dryden.

Let any man consider, how many sorrows he would have escap'd had God call'd him to his rest, and then say whether the promise to deliver the just from the evils to come ought not to be made our daily prayer. Wake.

More than wise men, when the war began, could promise to themselves in their most sanguine hopes.
Davenant.

2. Performance of promise; grant of the thing promised.

Now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee. Acts.

which seldom reaches to the degree that is promis'd
by the preachers of any remedies. Temple.

TO PROMISE. v. n.
1. To assure one by a promise.

Promising is the very air of th' time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act. Shakspere.

I dare promise for this play, that in the roughness of the numbers, which was to designed, you will see somewhat more masterly than any of my former tragedies. Dryden.

As he promis'd in the law, he will shortly have mercy, and gather us together. 2 Macabees.
All the pleasure we can take, when we met these promising sparks, is in the disappointment. Fellon.

She brib'd my flay, with more than human charms;
Nay promis'd, vainly promis'd, to bestow Immortal life. Pope.

2. It is used of assurance, even of ill.
Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?
—I fear it, I promise you. Shakspere.

break.] Violator of promises.

He's an hourly promisebreaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your entertainment. Shaksp.

PROMISER. n. f. [from promise.] One who promises.

Who let this promiser in? did you, good Diligence? Ben Jonson.
Give him his bribe again.
Fear's a large promiser; who subject live
To that base passion, know not what they give. Dryden.

PROMISSORY. adj. [promissorius, Latin.] Containing profession of some benefit to be conferred.

PRO

As the preceptive part enjoins the most and virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which is most exquisitely adapted to the same end. Deacy of Hay.

The promissory lyes of great men are known by shouldering, hugging, squeezing, smiling, and bowing. Chubbuck.

PROMISSORILY. adv. [from promissory.]
By way of promise.

Nor was he obliged by oath to a strict obligation of that which promissorily was unlawful. Bacon.

Promont I have observed only in Suckling.] A headland; a cape; high land jutting into the sea.

The land did shoot out with a great promontory.
Like one that stands upon a promontory.
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread. Shakspere.

A forked mountain, or blue promontory,
With trees upon it, nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Shakspere.

The waving sea can with each flood Bath some high promont. Suckling.

They, on their heads,
Main promontories flung, which in the air
Came shadowing, and oppress'd whole legions arm'd. Miles.

Every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory. Miles.
If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly. Pep.

TO PROMOTE. v. a. [promoveo, promotu
Latin.]

1. To forward; to advance.
Next to religion, let your care be to promote justice. Bacon.

Nothing lovelier can be found,
Than good works in her husband to promote. Miles.

He that talks deceitfully for truth, must hurt more by his example, than he promotes it by his arguments. Atterbury.

Frictions of the extreme parts promote the flux
the juices in the joints. A. Bartsch.

2. [promouvoir, Fr.] To elevate; to exalt to prefer.

I will promote thee unto very great honour.

promote.] Advancement; encouragement;
exaltation to some new honour or rank;
preferment.

Many fair promotions
Are daily given to enable those,
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakspere.

The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury.
Who holds his state at door 'mongst purpur'd nobles. Shakspere.

My rising is thy fall,
And my promotion will be thy destruction. Miles.

Thou youngest virgin-daughter of the skies
Made in the last promotion of the blest;
Whole plains new pluck'd from paradise,
In spreading branches more sublimely rise. Dryd.
To PROMOTE. v. a. [promoveo, Latin; promouvoir, French.] To forward; to advance; to promote. Little used.
Never yet was honest man,
That ever drove the trade of love;
It is impossible, nor can Integrity our ends promote. Buckling
Asking useless others, but promoting nothing. Fell.
PROMPT. adj. [prompt, French; promptus, Latin.]

My prompt obedience bows. Pope.

2. Quick; petulant.
I was too hasty to condemn unheard;
And you, perhaps, too prompt in your replies. Dryd.

3. Ready without hesitation; wanting no new motive.
Tell him, I'm prompt
To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel. Shak.

A world of spinning, prompt to bloody rage. Dryden.
Still more some rebel flows,
Prompt to sink the state, than he to save. Prior.

4. Ready; told down: as, prompt payment.
8. Easy; unobstructed.

The reception of light into the body of the building was very prompt, both from without and from within. Bacon.

To PROMPT. v. a. [prontare, Italian.]

1. To assist by private instruction; to help at a loss.

Sitting in some place, where no man shall prompt him, let the child translate his lesson. Athen.

You've put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to th' life.

- Come, come, we'll prompt you. Shakspere.
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear,
And I will prompt and humble my intents
To your well practis'd wise directions. Shakspere

None could hold the book to well to prompt and instruct this stage play, as he could. Bacon.

He needed not one to prompt him, because he could fix the prayers by heart. Sallust.

2. To dictate.

Every one some time or other dreams he is reading books, in which case the invention prompts to wisdom, that the mind is unpolished on. Addison.

Grace shines around her with benevolent beams,
And whispering angels prompt her golden dreams. Pope.

3. To incite; to instigate.

The Volscians stand Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon's again. Shakspere

Speak not by th' matter Which your heart prompts you to, but with such words. Shakspere.

But rooted in your tongue.

It they prompt us to anger, their design makes use of it to a further end, that the mind, being thus disquieted, may not be easily composed to peace. Dupre.

Rage prompted them at length, and found them arms. Milton.

And occasion prompts their warm desires. Pope.

4. To remind.

The inconceivable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown.

PROMPTER. n. f. [from prompt.]

1. One who helps a publick speaker, by suggesting the word to him when he alters.

Vol. II.

Were it my eye to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakspere

In florid impotence he speaks,
And as the prompter breathes, the poppet squeaks. Pope

2. An admonisher; a reminder.

We understand our duty without a teacher, and acquit ourselves as we ought to do without a prompter. Leitch.

PROMPTITUDE. n. f. [promptitude, Fr.
from promptus, Lat.] Readiness; quickness.

PROMPTLY. adv. [from prompt.] Readily;
quickly; expeditiously.

He that does his merchandise cheerfully, promptly, and readily, and the works of religion flowly, it is a sign that his heart is not right with God. Taylor

PROMPTNESS. n. f. [from prompt.] Readiness; quickness; alacrity.

Had not his stay been given him by that accidental tickle, his promptness and promptness of mind would have carried him directly forward to the enemy, till he had met him in the open plains of Persia. South

From steel and muscles, from pulse, activity, and promptness in animal actions, are signs of strong fibres. Leitch.

PROMPTUARY. n. f. [promptuare, Fr.
from promptus, Latin.] A storehouse; a repository; a magazine.

This factory is still expanded at top, serving as the storehouse for promptness, that furnishes forth matter for the formation of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

PROMPTURE. n. f. [from prompt.] Suggestion, motion given by another; insinuation. Not used.

To prompt back talk by prompture of the blood;
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up. Shakspere

To PROMULGATE. v. a. [promulgo, Lat.] To publish; to make known by open declaration.

Those chit I know he nothing so much hateth as to promulgate, yet I hope that this will occur on him to put forth his own goodly works. Spenser

Those, to whom he entrusted the promulgation of the gospel, had far different instructions.
Decay of Faith.

It is certain laws, by virtue of any sanction they receive from the promulgated will of the legislature, teach not a stranger, it by the law of nature every man hath not a power to punish others guiltless. Locke

PROMULGATION. n. f. [promulgation, Lat.
from promulgate.] Publication; open exhibition.

The dream and current of this rule hath gone so far, it hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the gospel. Hobbes

External promulgation, or speaking the truth, did not alter the same, in respect of the inward form or quality. Whit.

The very promulgation of the punishment will be part of the punishment, and anticipate the execution. South

PROMULGATOR. n. f. [from promulgate.]

Publisher; open teacher.

How grossly is a calumny this is, appears from the faculty of the Christian religion, which excludes fraud and falsehood; to also from the debasements and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piet.

To PROMULGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publish; to teach openly.

The chief design of them is, to establish the truth of a new revelation in those countries, where it is first promulged and propagated. Atterbury.

PROMULGER. n. f. [from promulge.] Publisher; promulgator.

The promulgators of our religion, Jesus Christ and his apostles, raised men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. Athen.

PROMATOR. n. f. [from promator, Latin.] A mule of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downward. Diet.

PRONE. adj. [pronus, Latin]

1. Bending downward; not erect.

There wanted yet a creature not prone,
And brute as other creatures, but add'd
With faculty of reason, might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.

2. Lying with the face downward: contrary to supine.

Upon these three positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise three postures, prone, supine, and erect. Boisson.

3. Precipitous; headlong; going downward.

Down rather prone in flight
He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky Sails between worlds. Milton.

4. Declivous; sloping.

Since the floods demand,
For their descent, a prone and sinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

5. Inclined; propense; disposed. It has commonly an ill sense.

The labour of doing good, with the pleasure arising from the contrary, doth make men for the most part slower to the one and proner to the other, than that duty, prescribed them by law, can prevail sufficiently with them. H. Lee.

Those who are ready to confess him in a moment and profession, are very prone to deny him in their doings. South.

If we are prone to sedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which supplies business to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addison.

Still prone to change, though still the slaves of fate. Pope.

PROMENESS. n. f. [from prone.]

1. The state of bending downward; not erectness.

It chiefly be taken, as it is largely opposed into pronus, or the posture of animals looking downwards, carrying their centers, or opposite part to the spine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of no more. Brown.

2. The state of lying with the face downward; not supineness.

3. Deceit; declivity.

4. Inclination; propension; disposition to ill.

The holy spirit saw that mankind is into virtue badly drawn, and that righteousness is the life accounted at, by reason of the pronus of our affections to that which delighteth. Hobbes.

The soul being left from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, cloth to nothing fall,
And thus declining pronus into nothing,
Is even that sin that we are born withal. Dryden

He instituted this worship, because of the carnality of their hearts, and the pronus of the people to idolatry. Tillotson

The pronus of good men to consider the want in whatever shape it appears. Atterbury

How great is the pronus of our nature, to comply with this temptation? Regis.

PROM. n. f. [pronghen, Dutch, to prongezze.
Minshew.] A fork.

The cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little goldbets, pick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.

Whom his sea-coal prong threw by,
And safely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.

Be mindful
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move.
The cruelties of earth. Dryden

PROM. n. f. [from prone.] Proneness.

Not used.

Of this mechanic pronus, I do not see any good tendency. Marc.

PRONOUNS. n. f. [pronom, Fr. pronomen, Latin.] A word that is used instead of the proper name.

I, thou, he; we, ye, they, are names given to persons, and used instead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of pronouns, as though they were not nouns themselves, but used instead of nouns. Clarke.

To PRONOUNCE. v. a. [pronounce, Fr. pronuncio, Lat.]

1. To speak; to utter.

He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth. Jeremiah.

2. To utter solemnly; to utter confidently.

So good a lady, that no tongue could ever pronounce dishonour of her. Shakespeare.

I have pronounced the word, faith the Lord. Jos.

3. To utter among the gods.

Abraham pronounced a sentence of death against his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.

By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd. Mit.

4. To utter rhetorically.

To PRONOUNCE. v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.

How confidently do men pronounce of themselves, and believe that they are then most pos- sible, when they are most eager and impetuous, yet as sure this is far removed from the true grounds of religion. Bacon of Prop.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wise men will, in matters of discourse, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act firmly. South.

PRONOUNCER. n. f. [from pronounce.]

One who pronounces.

PRONUNCIATION. n. f. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciation, Fr.]

1. The act or mode of utterance.

The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, easy, and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been touched out that were servicable for the purpose. Holder.

It were idle to produce thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

2. That part of rhetoric which teaches to speak in publick with pleasing utterance and graceful gesture.

PROOF. n. f. [from prove.]

1. Evidence; testimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always so testified, I see not how we should possibly win a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof sufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.

Though the manner of their trials should be altered, yet the proof of every thing must needs be by the testimony of such persons as the parties shall produce. Spenser.

That which I shall report will bear no credit. Shakespeare.

One soul in this, whereof good proof this day affords. Milton.

Things of several kinds may admit and require several sorts of proofs, all which may be good in their kind. And therefore nothing can be more irrational than for a man to doubt of, or deny the truth of any thing, because it can not be made out, by such kind of proofs of which the nature of such a thing is not capable. They ought not to expect either sensible proof, or demonstration of such matters as are not capable of such proofs, supposing them to be true. Watkins.

This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates, And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.

Those intervening ideas, which serve to shew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.

2. Test; trial; experiment.

Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.

3. Trial; trial; experiment.

Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.

4. Trial; trial; experiment.

Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.

And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.
5. To generate.
Sensations notions, propagated in fancy,
Are hardly ever totally eradicated. Clarke.

7. PROPAGATE. v. n. To have offspring.
No need that thou
Should'st propagate, already infinite,
And through all numbers absolute, though one. Milton.

PROPAGATION. n. f. [propagatio, Latin; propagation, French; from propagare.]
Continuance or diffusion by generation or successive production.

Men have souls rather by creation than propagation. Hobbes.
There are other secondary ways of the propagation of it, as lying in the same bed. Bacon.

There is not in all nature any spontaneous generation, but all come by propagation, wherein chance hath not the least part. Ray.

Old stakes of olive trees in plants revive;
But noble vines by propagation thrive. Dryden.

PROPAGATOR. n. f. [from propagare.]

1. One who continues by successive production.

2. A spreader; a promoter.

Satan, the greatest propagator of mortality, and an enemy to the unity of the Godhead, was to possess this talent, that he gained the name of the Father. Milton.

7. PROPET. v. a. [propello, Latin.] To drive forward.

As when winds fill the blood to be frothy that is propelled out of a vein of the brain. Hobbes.

This motion, in some human creatures, may be weak in respect to the vicinity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Abelard.

The excess of motion would be too feeble and languid to propel to visit and ponderous a body, with that prodigious velocity. Bentley.

7. PROPEND. v. n. [propendo, Latin, to hang forward.] To incline to any part, to be disposed in favour of any thing.

My faithful brethren, I propend to you,
In relation to keep them full. Shakespeare.

PROPENSITY. n. f. [from propendo.]

1. Inclination or tendency of desire to any thing.

2. [from propendo, Latin, to weigh.] Pre-consideration; attentive deliberation; propensity.

An act above the animal feelings, which are transient, and admit not of that attention, and propensity of actions. Hobbes.

PROPENSE. adj. [propensus, Lat.] Inclined; disposed. It is used both of good and bad.

Women, propense and inclinable to holiness, be added in good things, rather than carried away as captives. Hobbes.

I have brought foundal
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver, or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.

PROPESSION. n. f. [propension, French; propensio, Latin; from propensio.]

Moral inclination; disposition to any thing good or bad.

Some arrangements might escape, rather through necessities of state, than any propensity of myself to mournfulness. King Charles.

So forcible are our propensions to mutiny, that we equally take occasions from benefits or injuries. Government of the Tongue.

Let there be but propensities, and bent of will to religion, and there will be sedulity and indefatigable industry. South.

It requires a critical nicety to find out the genius or the propension of a child. L'Estrange.

The natural propension, and the inevitable occasions of complaint, accidents of fortune. Levy.
He adds us with a new nature of grace, sufficient to overcome the corrupt propensity of the will. Rogers.

2. Natural tendency.
Bodies that of themselves have no propensities to any determinate place, do nevertheless move continually and properly one way. Descartes.

This great attraction produces a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline constitution of the fluids. Boyle.

PROPER. adj. [proprie, Fr. proprius, Lat.]

1. Properly, not belonging to more; not common.

As for the virtues that belong unto moral righteousness and honesty of life, we do not mention them, because they are not proper unto children, such as they are children, but do concern them as they are men. Hobbes.

Men of learning hold it for a slip in judgment, when others are made to demonstrate that as proper to one thing, which reason findeth common unto many. Hobbes.

No fence the precious joys conceives,

Which in her private contemplations lie,
For, then the ravish'd spirit the senses leaves,
Hath her own powers and proper actions free. Dante.

Of nought no creature ever formed aught,
For that is proper to the Almighty's hand. Dante.

Emerson's rules, concerning the posture of the figures, are almost wholly proper to painting, and admit not any comparison with poetry. Dryden.

Outward objects, that are external to the mind, and its own operations, proceeding from powers unimpaired and proper to itself, which become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

They professed themselves servants of Jehovah their God, in a relation and respect peculiar and proper to themselves. Nepos.

2. Noting an individual.

A proper name may become common, when given to several beings of the same kind, as Caesar and John.

3. One's own. It is joined with any of the possessives: as, my proper, their proper.

The bloody book of law
You shall yourself read to the latter letter.
After your own love, yet, though every man Stood in your action. Shakespeare.

Count the cost.

With four what of your proper eye. Hobbes.
If we might determine it, our proper conceptions would be all void of sense. Cartesius.

Now learn the difference at once, proper and improper, true and false, and a empty boat. Dante.

4. Natural; original.

In proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat. Milton.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. King Lear.

9. [propre, French.] Elegant; pretty.
Moses was a proper child. Hebrew.

10. Tall; lusty; handsome with bulk. A low word.

At last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properst man in Italy. Shakespeare.

A proper goodly toy was carrying to execution. L'Estrange.

PROPRIETY. adv. [from proprie.]

1. Fitly; suitably.

2. In a direct sense.

What does it at what has life
And in the body propriety hath neither. Milton.

The nature of life are not propriety owing to the material substance of things. Swift.

It is a nature in which the works of every man, good as well as bad, are propriety his own. Rogers.

PROPRIETIES. n. f. [from proprie.]

1. The quality of being proper.

2. Talents.

PROPRIETY. n. f. [from proprie.]

1. Peculiar quality.

What kind of propriety or quality is that, which being no where found but in himself, maketh it essential to have souls? Hobbes.

A secondary essential mode, is any attribute of a thing, which is not of primary consideration, and is called a propriety. Watts.

2. Quality; disposition.

This conviction, not force, that must induce assent, and here the logic of a conquering word has no great propriety that way, hence it may, but convince it cannot. Dean of Petty.

It is the propriety of an old farmer to find delight in reviewing his own villanies in others. South.

3. Right of possession.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inherent use of rule, over men, and propriety in things, spring from the same original, and were to be derived by the same rules. Locke.

Propriety, whole original is from the right a man has to the use of the inferior creatures, for subsistence and comfort, is for the sole advantage of the propriety, so that he may even destroy the thing that he has propriety in. Locke.

4. Not then held in one's own right.
For numerous things, yearly flourish'd,
And propriety as a plenty crown'd.
Accept of your posterity. Dryden.

5. The thing possessed.

In a proper disposition
I could have thee but as a propriety. Shakespeare.

Now under such a name, as a propriety, when we are to be rich, when propriety is to be well, and so. Swift.

6. No rights or right. I know not which is the sense in the following lines,

But I did not think propriety of it,
Propriety, and propriety of it,
And so I thought to say he it came.
Hold thee. St. Asaph.

7. Something useful; an appendage; a technical term.

I will draw a bill of propriety, such as our play wants. St. Asaph.

The purple garment, and the lawyer's fees,
High priests and state are all but propriety. Dryden.

Greenfield was the name of the propriety man in that time, who furnished implements to the actors. Pope.

8. Property for propriety. Any thing peculiarly adapted. Not used.

Our poet excel in candour and gravity, smoothness and propriety, in quackery and burlesque. Condell.

TO PROPRIETY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with qualities.

He heard an
Cried the world, his voice was propriety'd.
As all the world spheres. Shakespeare.

2. To seize or retain as something owned, or in which one has a right; to appropriate.

3 B 2

prate; to hold. This word is not now used in either meaning.

His large fortune
Subdues and properties to his love and tendence
All sorts of hearts. Shakespeare
They have here propitiated me, keep me in darkness, and do all they can to face me out of my way. Shakespeare

I am too highborn to be propitiated,
To be a secondary at controul. Shakespeare
PROPHASIS, n. f. [πρόφασις]. In medicine, a foreknowledge of diseases.

PROPHET, n. f. [πρόφητα; propheta, Fr.] A declaration of something to come; prediction.

He shall be found,
And taken or proscribed this happy ground. Dryden
Some utterly proscribe the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed, if taken by us in that sense in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South

PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribere.] One that dooms to destruction.

The triumvir and prosciber had descended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace. Dryden

PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [proscriptio, Latin.]

cutus*, Lat.]

1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.

I am belov'd of beauteous Hernia,
Why should not I then prosecute my right? Shalf

I must not omit a father's timely care,
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom. Milton

That which is morally good is to be desired and prosecuted; that which is evil is to be avoided. Wilkins

PRO

He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without incoherent follies. Lacke

2. To continue; to carry on.

The same reasons, which induced you to entertain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward

All resolute to prosecute their ire,
Seeking their own and country's cause to free

He assailed Oxford, which gave them the town, reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon

With her letters

She prosecutes her joys, and thus replies. Dryden

3. To proceed in confutation or disqui-sition of any thing.

An infinite labour to prosecute those things, for as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hogew

4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.

5. To prosecute differs from to persecute, to prosecute always implies some cruelty, unlawfully, or injustice; to persecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.

PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecute.]

PRURIGINOUS. adj. [prurio, Latin.] Tending to an itch.

TO PRY. v. a. [of unknown derivation]

To peep narrowly; to inspect officiously, curiously, or impertinently.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side,
Intending deep suspicion. Shakspere.

I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand he had his two tons hand. Shakspere.

Watch thou, and wake when others he sleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state. Shakspere.

We of th' offending side
Must keep aloof from strict abatement;

And stop all sight holes, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us. Shakspere.
He that pryeth in at her windows, shall also hearken at her doors. Feelinghouse.

We have naturally a curiosity to be prying and searching into forbidden secrets. L'Estrange.

Search well

Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape,
Lest hid in some th' arch-hypocrite escape. Dryden.

I wak'd, and looking round the how'r
Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry bow'r.

If any where by chance I might espy
The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.
Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies, to find the milky way. Creech.
Actions are of so mixt a nature, that as we pry into them, so observe some parts more than others.

they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them.

All these I frankly own without denying;
But where has this Praxiteles been prying?

Addison.

PSALM. n. f. [psalme, pseume, Fr. ψαλμος.] A holy song.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker.
Stenhold was made groom of the chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse.

Peacham.

Those just spirits that wear victorious pulms,
Hymns devote and holy psalms
Singing continually.

Milton.

In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation.
She, her daughters, and her maids, meet together at all the hours of prayer in the day, and chant psalms, and other devotions, and spend the rest of their time in such good works, and innocent diversions, as render them fit to return to their psalms and prayers. Law.

PSALMIST. n. f. [psalmiste, French; from psalm.] A writer of holy songs.

How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the pagans scheme in Virgil, where the deity is represented as raising a storm, and another as laying it?

Addison.

PSALMODY. n. f. [psalmodie, Fr. ψαλμωδία.] The act or practice of singing holy songs.

PSALMOGRAPHY. n. f. [ψαλμος and γραφή.] The act of writing psalms.

PUBLICATION. n. f. [publico, Lat.]

1. The act of publishing; the act of notifying to the world; divulgation; proclamation.

For the instruction of all men to eternal life, it is necessary that the sacred and saving truth of God be openly published unto them, which open publication of heavenly mysteries is by an excellency termed preaching. Hooker.

2. Edition; the act of giving a book to the publick.

An imperfect copy having been offered to a bookseller, you consented to the publication of one more correct. Pope.

The publication of these papers was not owing to our folly, but that of others. Swift.

PUBLIC. adj. [public, publique, Fr. publicus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a state or nation; not private.

By following the law of private reason, where the law of publick should take place, they breed disturbance. Hooker.

They have with bitter clamours defaced the publick service of our church. White.

Of royal maids how wretched is the fate,
Born only to be victims of the state;
Our hopes, our wishes, all our passions try'd
For publick use, the slaves of others pride. Granville.

Have we not able counsellors hourly watching over the publick weal? Swift.

2. Open; notorious; generally known.

Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. Matthew.

3. General; done by many.

A dismal, universal his, the sound
Of publick scorn. Milton.

4. Regarding not private interest, but the good of the community.

They were publick hearted men, as they paid all taxes, to they gave up all their time to their country's service, without any reward. Clarendon.

All nations that grew great out of little or nothing, did so merely by the publick mindedness of particular persons. South.

A good magistrate must be endued with a publick spirit, that is, with such an excellent temper, as sets him loose from all selfish views, and makes him endeavour towards promoting the common good. Atterbury.

5. Open for general entertainment.

The income of the commonwealth is raised on such as have money to spend at taverns and publick houses. Addison.

PUBLIC. n. f. [from publicus, Lat. le publique, Fr.]

1. The general body of mankind, or of a state or nation; the people.

Those nations are most liable to be over-run and conquered, where the people are rich, and where, for want of good conduct, the publick is poor. Davenant.

The publick is more disposed to censure than to praise. Addison.

2. Open view; general notice.

Philosophy, though it likes not a gaudy dress, yet, when it appears in publick, must have so much complacency, as to be clothed in the ordinary fashion. Locke.

In private grieve, but with a careless scorn;
In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.

In publick 'tis they like,
Where none distinguish. Pope.

PUBLICLY. adv. [from publick.]

1. In the name of the community.

This has been so sensibly known by trading nations, that great rewards are publicly offered for its supply. Addison.

2. Openly; without concealment.

Sometimes also it may be private, communicating to the judges some things not fit to be publicly delivered. Bacon.

PUBLICNESS. n. f. [from publick.]

1. State of belonging to the community.
The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Bayle.

2. Openness; state of being generally known or publick.

PUBLICSPIRITED. adj. [publick and spirit.] Having regard to the general advantage above private good.

'Tis enough to break the neck of all honest purposes, to kill all generous and publick spirited notions in the conception. L'Estrange.

These were the publick spirited men of their age; that is, patriots of their own interest. Dryden.

Another publick spirited project, which the common enemy could not foresee, might let king Charles on the throne. Addison.

It was generous and publick spirited in you, to be of the kingdom's side in this dispute, by shewing, without reserve, your disapprobation of Wood's design. Swift.

TO PUBLISH. v. a. [publier, Fr. publico, Latin.]

1. To discover to mankind; to make generally and openly known; to proclaim; to divulge.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have published me? Shakspeare.

His commission from God and his doctrine tend to the impressing the necessity of that reformation, which he came to publish. Hammond.

Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all. Milton.

Th' unwearied son, from day to day,
Does his Creator's power display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an almighty hand. Spenser.

2. To put forth a book into the world.

If I had not unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it by me. Digby.

PUBLISHER. n. f. [from publish.]

1. One who makes publick or generally known.

Love of you
Hath made me publisher of this pretence. Shakspeare.

The apostle doth not speak as a publisher of a new law, but only as a teacher and monitor of what his lord and master had taught before. Ketticwell.

The holy lives, the exemplary sufferings of the publishers of this religion, and the surpassing excellence of that doctrine which they published. Atterbury.

PUD

2. One who puts out a book into the world.
A collection of poems appeared, in which the publisher has given me some things that did not belong to me. Prior.

PUCCELAGE, n. f. [French.] A state of virginity. Dict.

PUCK, n. f. [perhaps the same with pug.] Some sprite among the fairies, common in romances.
O gentle puce, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain. Shaksp.
Turn your cloaks,
Quoth he, for puce is busy in these oaks,
And this is truly ground. Corbet.

PUCKBALL, or PUCKSHIT, n. f. [from puce the fairy, a fairy's ball.] A kind of muthroom full of dust. Dict.

TO PUCKER, v. a. [from puce the fairy: as elbow, from elf; or from puce, a pocket or hollow.] To gather into corrugations; to contract into folds or plications.
I saw an hideous spectre; his eyes were sunk into his head, his face pale and withered, and his skin puckered up in wrinkles. Spectator.
A figure above the part wounded is pernicious, as it puckers up the muscles, and disorders its situation. Shaup.

PUDDER, n. f. [This is commonly written potter. See POTTER. This is most probably derived by eye from puce, puce, puce, a rapid motion.] A tumult; a turbulent and irregular bufile.
Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful puce o'er our heads,
Find out then cures. Shakspere.
What a puce is made about effences, and how much is all knowledge peffered by the careless ate of words? Locke.

TO PUDDER, v. n. [from the noun.] To make a tumult; to make a bufile.
Mathematicians, abstracting their thoughts from numbers, and letting before their minds the ideas themselves, have avoided a great part of that perplexity, pudding and confusion, which has to much hindered knowledge. Locke.

TO PUDDER, v. a. To perplex; to disturb; to confound.
He that will improve every matter of fact into a maxim, will abound in contrary observations, that can be of no other use but to perplex and puce
him. Locke.

PUDGING, n. f. [potten, Welsh, an intestine; boudin, French; pudding, Swedish.]

1. A kind of food very variously compounded; but generally made of meal, milk, and eggs.
Salads, and eggs, and lighter fare
Tune the Italian spunk's guitar,
And if I take Dan Congreve right,
Pudding and beef make Triton's fight. Prior.
2. The gut of an animal.
He'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days;
the king has kill'd his heart. Shakspere.
As sure as his guts are made of pudding. Shaksp.
3. A bowel stuffed with certain mixtures of meal and other ingredients.
4. A proverbial name for victuals.

1. The time of dinner; the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, is set upon the table.

PUI

2. Nick of time; critical minute.
Mars that full protects the flout,
In pudding time came to his aid. Hudibras.

PUDBLE, n. f. [from puce, Latin, Skinner; from puce, dirt, old Bavarian, Junus; hence puce.] A small muddy lake; a dirty plath.
The puce was drunk of the well-head, the Greeks of the stream, and the puce of the puce. Hall.
Thou didst drink
The stale of holes, and the gilded puce
Which beasts would cough at. Shakspere.
A physician cured madness thus; they were tied to a stake, and then set in a puce, till brought to their wits. Dr. Frenge.
Treading where the treacherous puce lay,
His heels flew up, and on the grassy floor
He fell, but not with flight. Dryden.
Happy was the man, who was sent on an errand to the most remote street, which he performed with the greatest alacrity, ran through every puce, and took care to return covered with dirt. Addison.

TO PUDDLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To muddy; to foul or pollute with dirt; to mix dirt and water.
As I saw my gun-lane in a puddled water, I cried out of nock up but puce. Sidney.
Some unwhit'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit, and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakspere.
His head they sing'd off with brand of fire,
And even as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. Shakspere.

The noblest blood of Africa
Runs in my veins, a purer stream than thine;
For, though derived from the same source, thy current
Is puddled and defil'd with tyranny. Dryden.

PUDDLY, adj. [from puce.] Muddy; dirty; myry.
Lamy, or thick puddly water killeth them. Carver.

PUDDOCK, or parrock, n. f. [for puddock or parrock.] A provincial word for a small enclosure. Dict.

PUDDISY, n. f. [puccus, Lat.] Modesty; shamefacedness.
A puccus to not, the sweet view on't Might well have winn'd old Saturn. Shakspere.

PUDICITY, n. f. [puccus, Fr. from puccus, Lat.] Modesty; chastity. Dict.

PUEFELLOW, n. f. A partner.
This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body;
And makes her puccus with others mean. Shakspere.

PUERILE, adj. [puccus, Fr. puccus, Lat.] Childish; boyish.
I looked upon the mission with a veneration next with a pleasure, that represented her to me in those puccus amusements. Pope.

PUERILITY, n. f. [puccus, Fr. from puccus, Lat.] Childishness; boyishness.
A reticence of puccus not shaken off from school.
Some men imagining themselves possessed with a disme fury, often fall into toys and trifles, which are only puccus. Dryden.

PUEP, n. f. [upupa.] A kind of water-fowl.
Among the first fort are coots, fanderlings and puccus. Curse.
These fish have enemies enough; as otters, the cormorant, and the puccus. Watson.

PUFF, n. f. [puccus, Dutch, a blast which swells the cheeks.]

1. A quick blast with the month.
In gurret vile, he with a warning puccus
Regales child's fingers. Philips.
2. A small blast of wind.
The Rosemary, in the days of Henry VII. with a sudden puccus of wind swooped her side, and took in water at her ports in such abundance, as that she instantly sunk. Herak.

PUF

The naked breathless body lies,
To every puccus of wind a slave,
At the beck of every wave,
That once perhaps was fair, rich, stout and wife. Flute.

A puccus of wind blows off cap and wig. Flute.

There fierce winds o'er dusky vallies blow,
Whose every puccus bears empty shades away. Dryden.
With one fierce puccus he blows the leaves away,
Expos'd the self discover'd infant lay. Dryden.

3. A fungous ball filled with dust.
4. Any thing light and porous; as, puccus paper.
5. Something to sprinkle powder on the hair.

TO PUFF, v. n. [puccus, Dutch.]

1. To swell the cheeks with wind.
2. To blow with a quick blast.
Wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy South puccus with wind and rain? Shakspere.
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakspere.
3. To blow with scornfulness.
Some puccus at these instances, as being such as were under a different economy of religion, and consequently not directly pertinent to ours. Swift.
It is really to defy heaven, to puccus at damnation, and bid omnipotence do its worst. Swift.
4. To breathe thick and hard.
Seldshewn flourish.
Do puffs among the puccus char throngs, and puccus
To win a vulgar station. Shakspere.
The puccus comes back again, puccus and blows from the chair. Dr. Johnson.
A true son of the church
Can puccus with his graily bald-pate choir,
And puccus o'er his beads. Dryden.
5. To do or move with hurry, tumult, or tumultuous agitation.
More inconstant than the wind, who woees
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north,
And, being anger'd, puccus away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South. Shakspere.

Then came brave glory puccus by
In filks that whistled, who but he?
He scarce allow'd me half an eye. Herbert.

6. To swell with the wind or air.
A new coal is not to be eat on the nitre, till the detonation be quite ended; unless the puccus matter blow the coal out of the crucible. Boyle.

TO PUFF, v. a.

1. To inflate or make swell as with wind it has up intensive.
Have I not heard the sea, puccus up with wind
Rage like an angry boat chased with wind? Shakspere.
Let him fall by his own greatness,
And puccus him up with glory, till it swell
And break him. Dryden.
Flattering of others, and boasting of virtues may be referred to lying; and the use to please others and puccus them up with self conceit; the other to gain more honour than is due to ourselves. Pope.
2. To drive or agitate with blasts of wind.
I have seen the cannon,
When it has blown his tanks into the air,
And from his arm puccus his own brother. Shakspere.
The unerring gun by certain signs declares,
When the fourth projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing north will puccus the clouds away. Dryden.
Why must the winds all hold their tongue
If they a little breath should raise;
Would that have spoil'd the poet's song,
Or puccus away the monarch's praise? Pope.
I have been endeavouring very busily to raise a friendship, which the first breath of any ill-natured by-finder could puccus away. Pope.
3. To drive with a blast of breath scold-fully.
I can enjoy her while she's kind,
But when she dances in the wind,

P U I

And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
I puff the prostitute away;
The little or the much she gave is quietly resign'd.
Dryden.

4. To swell or blow up with praise.
The attendants of courts engage them in quarrels of jurisdiction, being truly parasiti curiae, in puffing a court up beyond her bounds for their own advantage. Bacon.

5. To swell or elate with pride.
His look like a coxcombe up puffed with pride.
Tupper.

This army, led by a tender prince,
Whole spirit with divine ambition puff'd,
Mars' mouth at the invisible event. Shakespeare.
Mark not of men above that which is written,
That no one of you be puffed up one against another.
1 Corinthians.

Your ancestors, who puff your mind with pride,
Did not your honour, but their own advance.
Dryden.

Who stands safest? tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd prosperity? Pope.
The Pharaohs were so puffed up with their great felicity, that they thought nothing impossible. Broomer.

PUFFER. n. f. [from puff.] One that puffs.

P U L

a pulvis judge, who hath approved himself deserving, should be preferred. Bacon.

3. Petty; inconsiderable; small.

A pulvis alter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his stiff like a noble goose. Shaksp.

PUISSANCE. n. f. [puissance, Fr.] This word seems to have been pronounced with only two syllables.] Power; strength; force.

The chariots were drawn not by the strength of horses, but by the puissance of men.

Grandfères, babies and old women:
Or pass, or not arriv'd to, pith and puissance.

Look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the pow'r and puissance of the king.

Our puissance is our own, our own right hand
Shall teach us highest deeds. Milton.

PUISSANT. adj. [puissant, Fr.] Powerful; strong; forcible.

The queen is coming with a puissant host.

Told the most piteous tale of Lear
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Shakespeare.

For piety renown'd and puissant deeds. Milton.

The climate of Syria, the far distance from the strength of chivalry, and the near neighbourhood of those that were most puissant among the muslimans, caused that famous enterprise, after a long continuance of terrible war, to be quite abandoned. Raleigh.

PUISSANTLY. adv. [from puissant.]
Powerfully; forcibly.

PUKE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

The sweetener salutaris are add'd too. Garth.

PUCHRITUDE. n. f. [puchritudo, Lat.]
Beauty; grace; handiomeness; quality opposite to deformity.

Neither will it agree unto the beauty of animals,
wherein there is an approved puchritude. Brown.

Puchritude is conveyed by the outward senses unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which relies it. More.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the puchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.

That there is a great puchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray.

To PULP. v. n. [pialer, Fr.]

1. To cry like a chicken.

Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings; let the mulick likewise be sharp and loud. Bacon.

To PULL. v. a. [pullian, Sax.]

1. To draw violently toward one; opposed to push, which is to drive from one.

What they seem to offer us with the one hand,
the same with the other they pull back. Hooker.

He put forth his hand, and pulled the dove in.

His hand which he put forth dried up, so that he could not pull it in again. 1 Kings.

Pull them out like sleep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Jeremiah.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears. Zechariah.

All fortune never crushed that man, whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have cancelled my friends to place all things she gave them so as the might take them from them, not pull them.

2. To draw forcibly; commonly with on or off, or some other particle.

He was not so desirous of wars, as without just cause of his own to pull them upon him.

A boy came in great hurry to pull off my boots.

3. To pluck; to gather.

When bounteous Autumn rears his head,
He joys to pull the ripen'd pear. Dryden.

Flax pulled in the bloom, will be whiter and stronger than if let stand till the seed is ripe.

4. To tear; to rend.

He hath turn'd aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces; he hath made me desolate. Lamentations.

5. To PULL down. To subvert; to demolish.

Although it was judged in form of a statute, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated, and his houses pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ignominy. Bacon.

In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summers a-building, and that by no mean artists, was destroyed in a moment. Hovel.

When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and subverts worlds. Burnet.

6. To PULL down. To degrade.

He begat the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel,
to raise the wretched, and pull down the proud.

What title has this queen but hawk's force?

And force must pull her down. Dryden.

They may be afraid to pull down ministers and favourites grown formidable. Dacourt.

7. To PULL up. To extirpate; to endicate.

What censur, doubting thus of innate principles,
I may derive from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell, I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays the de-foundations sure. Lacke.

PU'LL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of pulling.

I awoke with a violent pull upon the ring, which was fastened at the top of my box. Gulliver.

PULSATION. n. f. [pulsation, Fr. pulsatio, from pulsio, Lat.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.

This original of the left vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery.

These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choked and obstructed in its pulsation.

PULSATOR. n. f. [from pulsio, Lat.] A striker; a beater.

PULSE. n. f. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated, when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart; this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; a high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse; again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse.

I think you, I bear the shears of destiny? Have I commandment on the pulse of life? The property of the neighbouring kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health.

My body is from all diseases free; My temperate pulse does regularly beat.

If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass.

2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of early transition and early reflection, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sound.

3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.

4. [from pull] Leguminous plants. Plants not reaped but pulled or plucked.

With Elijah he partook, Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse, Mortals, from your fellows blood abstain! While corn and pulse by nature are below'd.

Tares are as advantageous to land as other pulse.

TO PULSE. v. n. [from the noun.] To beat as the pulse.

The heart, when separated wholly from the body in some animals, continues still to pulse for a considerable time.

PULSION. n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.] The act of driving or of forcing forward: in opposition to suction or traction.

Admit it might use the motion of pulsion, yet it could never that of attraction.

By attraction we do not here understand what is

TO PULVIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To sprinkle with perfumes in powder.

Have you pulvilled the coachman and postilion, that they may not sink of the stable?

PUMICE. n. f. [pumer, pumicis, Lat.] A flag or cinder of some fossil, originally bearing another form, reduced to this state by fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities; and of a pale, whitish, grey colour. the pumice is found particularly about the burning mountains.

So long I tot, that all was spent, Though pumice stones I hastily lent, And threw; but nought availed. Etna and Vesuvius, which consist upon sulphur, shoot forth smoke, ashes, and pumice, but no water.

Near the Lucrine lake, Steams of sulphur raise a stifling heat, And through the pores of the warm pumice pass.

PUMMEL. n. f. See POMMEL.

PUMP. n. f. [pompe, Dutch and French]

1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.

A pump grown dry will yield no water, and you pour a little water into it first.

In the framing that great ship built by Hæc, Athenæus mentions this instrument as being used of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily draw out the water, though very deep.

Pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them, or double: two.

2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

Get good things to your beads, new ribbons to your pumps.

I follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out the pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular. Thula's eye was her prerogative over that of poetry, her nose, mantle, and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage.

Splish splash in their pumps.

Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd.

Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursuit.

He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursuit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfaction; and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them.

3. Prosecution; continuance of endeavour.

He concluded with sighs and tears, to confound them, that they would no more press him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursuit of it.

PURSUANT, n. f. [poursuivant, Fr.]

A state messenger; an attendant on the heralds.

How oft do they with golden pinnons cleave

The flitting skies, like flying pursuants.

Their grey locks, the pursuants of death,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

Send out a pursuant at arms

To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power

Before him riding.

For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the order to Edmund Bolton, Gerard Leigh, Jon Ferne, and John, Cuthbert Portmouth, pursuants of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory.

The pursuants came next,

And like the heralds couch his scutcheon bore.

PURSY, adj. [purshy, French.] Short-breathed and fat.

In the fatness of their purshy times,

Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,

Yea couch and woo for leave to do it good.

Now breathless wrong

Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,

And purshy insolence shall break his wind

With fear and horrid flight.

Grown fat and purshy by retail

Of pots of beer and bottled ale.

By these, the Medes

Perfume their breaths, and cure old purshy men.

PURTEANCE, n. f. [appertenance, Fr.]

The pluck of an animal.

Loath the lamb with fire, his head with his legs and with the purteance thereof.

The shaft against a rib did glance,

And gall'd him in the purteance.

PURVEYOR, n. f. [from purvey.]

1. One that provides victuals.

And woud' purveyors his sharp hunger fed

With trugal scraps of flesh, and mallow bread.

The purveyors or victuallers are much to be commended, as not a little faulty in that behalf.

2. A procurer; a pimp.

The purveyors are such cunning purveyors.

Mark where their appetites have once been plac'd

The same resemblance in a younger lover

Lies brooding in their fancies the same pleasures.

The stranger, ravish'd at his good fortune, introduced to some imaginary title, for the purveyor has her representatives of some of the ladies.

3. An officer who exacted provision for the king's followers.

PURVIEW, n. f. [pourveu, Fr.] Provision, providing clause.

Though the petition expresses only treason and felony, yet the act is general against all appeals to parliament; and many times the purview of an act is larger than the preamble or the petition.

PURVIEW, } n. f. [from purview.]

PURVIEW, } Generation of pus in matter.

Consumptions are induced by purview in any of the viscera.

behind him. L'Estrange.
We have beaten the French from all their advanced posts, and driven them into their last entrenchments: one vigorous pusk, one general assault will force the enemy to cry out for quarter. Addison.

5. Exigence; trial; extremity.

We'll put the matter to the present pusk.
Is common to talk of dying for a friend, but when it comes to the pusk, 'tis no more than talk. L'Estrange.

The question we would put, is not, whether the sacrament of the mass be as truly propitiatory, as it is under the law? but, whether it be as truly a sacrifice: if so, then it is a true proper sacrifice, and is not only commemorative or representative,
as we are told at a pusk. Atterbury.

6. A sudden emergence.

There's time enough for that;
Let them desire, upon this pusk, to trouble
Your joys with like relation. Shakespeare.

7. [pustula, Lat.] A pimple; an efflorescence; a wheal; an eruption.

He that was praised to his hurt, should have a pusk rise upon his nose; as a blister will rise upon when they should be learning. L'Estrange.

PUSILLANIMITY. n. f. [pusillanimité, Fr. pusillus and animus, Lat.] Cowardice; meanness of spirit.

The property of your excellent spirit is the warning of the blood, which, before cold and et-tled, left the liver white and pale, the badge of pusillanimité and cowardice. Shakespeare.

The Chinese said where they will; which sheweth, that their law of keeping out strangers is a law of pusillanimité and fear. Bacon.

It is obvious, to distinguish between an act of courage and an act of rashness, an act of pusi- lanimity, and an act of great modesty or humility.

PUSILLANIMOUS, adj. [pusillanime, Fr. pusillus and animus, Lat.] Meantspirited; narrowminded; cowardly.

An argument fit for great princes, that neither by overmeasuring their forces they lose themselves in vain enterprises; nor, by undervaluing them, descend to fearful and pusillanimitous councils. Bacon.

He became pusillanimitous, and was easily ruffled with every little passion within; supine, and as openly exposed to any temptation from without. Woodward.

What greater instance can there be of a weak pusillanimitous temper, than for a man to push his whole life in opposition to his own sentiments? Spencer.

P U Z

- The most wretched sort of people are dreamers spare cuts and putters of cakes. L'Estrange.
1. Pu'tter on. Inciter; instigator.
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
At me chiefly on you, as putter on
Of late exactions. Shakespeare.
You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for it. Shakespeare.
- PUTTING-STONE. n. f.
In some parts of Scotland, stones are laid at the gates of great houses, which they call putting-stones, for trials of strength. Pope.
- PUTTICK. n. f. [derived by Mingler, from lutio, Lat.] A buzzard.
Who finds the partridge in the puttick's nest,
Put may imagine how the bird was dead? Shallp.
The next are those, which are called birds of prey,
as the eagle, hawk, puttick, and cornarant. Peacham.
- PUTTY. n. f.
1. A kind of powder on which glass is ground.
An object glass of a fourteen foot telescope, made by an artificer at London, I once mended considerably, by grinding it on putch with putty, and leaving it very easily in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newton.
2. A kind of cement used by glaziers.
3. PUZZLE. v. a. [for posse, from posse. Skinner.]
1. To perplex; to confound; to embarrass; to entangle; to gravel; to put to a stand; to tease.
Your presence needs must puzzle Antony. Shakespeare.
I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog. Shakespeare.
Both armies of the enemy would have been puzzled what to have done. Clarendon.
A very shrewd disputant in those points is dexterous in puzzling others, if they be not thoroughly-versed speculators in those great theories. Moor.
I shall purposely omit the mention of argument, which relate to infinity, as being not to easily intelligible, and therefore more apt to puzzle and amuse, than to convince. Wilkins.
He is perpetually puzzled and perplexed amidst his own blunders, and mistakes the cause of those he would confute. Addison.
Perkins, who labour under real evils, will not puzzle themselves with conjectural ones. Clarissa.
She strikes each point with native force of mind,
While puzzled fearing blunders far behind. Young.
2. To make intricate; to entangle.
The ways of heaven are dark and intricate,
Pasted in mazes, and perplex'd with error. Addison.

P Y R

- These, as my guide informed me, were men of subtle tempers, and puzzled politicks, who would supply the place of real wisdom with cunning and avarice. Tatler.
- I did not indeed at first imagine there was in it such a jargon of ideas, such an inconsistency of notions, such a confusion of particles, that rather puzzle than connect the sense, which in some places he seems to have named at, as I found upon my nearer perusal of it. Addison.
- TO PUZZLE. v. n. To be bewildered in one's own notions; to be awkward.
The servant is a puzzling fidd, that heels nothing.
L'Estrange.
- PUZZLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Embarrassment; perplexity.
Mena great at fortune are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business, they have no time to tend their health either of body or mind. Bacon.
- PUZZLER. n. f. [from puzzle.] He who puzzles.
- PYGARG. n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
- PYGMÆAN. adj. [from pygmy.] Belonging to a pygmy.
They, less than smallest dwarfs in narrow room,
Throng numberless like that pygmean race
Beyond the Indian mount. Milton.
- PYGMÆ. n. f. [from pygme, Fr. pygmée.]
A dwarf; one of a nation fabled to be only three spans high, and after long wars to have been destroyed by cranes.
Any thing little.
If they deny the present spontaneous production or larger plants, and confine the earth to as pygmy burths in the vegetable kingdom, as they do in the other; yet surely in such a supposed universal dicay of nature, even mankind itself that is now nourished, though not produced, by the earth, must have degenerated in stature and strength in every generation. Bentley.
- PYLO'RUS. n. f. [from πυλός.] The lower orifice of the stomach.
- PYRAMID. n. f. [from pyramide, Fr. pyramide, from πύρ, fire; because fire always ascends in the figure of a cone.] A solid figure, whose base is a polygon, and whose sides are plain triangles, their several points meeting in one. Harris.
Know, Sir, that I will not wunt pinion'd at your master's court; rather make my country's high pyramids my gibbet, and hang me up in chains. Shakespeare.
An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In ornamental waters dipt above,
Of it a brand extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames. Dryden.

P Y X

- Part of the ore is shot into quadrilateral pyramids.
Woodward.
- PYRAMIDAL. adj. [from pyramid.]
PYRAMIDICAL. adj. Having the form of a pyramid.
Of which sort likewise are the gems or stones,
that are here shot into cubes, into pyramidal forms,
or into angular columns. Woodward.
The pyramidal idea of its flame, upon occasion of the candles, is what is in question. Locke.
- PYRAMIDICALLY. adv. [from pyramidical.] In form of a pyramid.
Olympus is the largest, and therefore he makes it the basis upon which Ossa stands, that being the next to Olympus in magnitude, and Pelion being the least, is placed above Ossa, and thus they rise pyramidically. Brown.
- PYRAMIS. n. f. A pyramid.
The form of a pyramis is lame, which we usually see, is merely by accident, and that the air about, by quenching the sides of the flame, contract it, and extend it into that form, for of itself it would be round, and therefore smoke is in the figure of a pyramis reversed; for the air quencheth the flame, and receives the smoke. Boyle.
- PYRE. n. f. [from pyra, Lat.] A pile to be burnt.
When his brave son upon the funeral pyre
He saw extended, and his head on fire. Dryden.
With tender billet-doux he lights the pyre,
And breathes three anxious sighs to rule the fire. Pope.
- PYRITES. n. f. [from πύρ.] Firestone.
Pyrites contains sulphur, sometimes arsenick, always iron, and sometimes copper. Woodward.
- PYROMANCY. n. f. [from πύρ, fire, and μαντεία, divination by fire.] Divination by fire.
Divination was invented by the Persians, and is scarcely or never taken in a good sense; there are four kinds of divination, hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, geomancy. Achille.
- PYROTECHNICAL. adj. [from pyrotechnique, Fr. from pyrotechnicks.] Engaged or skilled in fireworks.

τεχνή.] The art of employing fire to use or pleasure; the art of fireworks.
- PYROTECHNIC. n. f. [from pyrotechnic, French.]
The art of managing fire.
Great discoveries have been made by the means of pyrotechny and chymistry, which in late ages have attained to a greater height than formerly. Hale.
- PYRRHONISM. n. f. [from Pyrrho, the founder of the skepticks.] Skepticism; universal doubt.
- PYX. n. f. [from pyxis, Latin.] The box in which the Romans keep the host.

Q.

Q

Q is a consonant borrowed from the Latin or French, for which, though q is commonly placed in the Saxon alphabet, the Saxons generally used cp, cw; a cællan or cwellan, to quell; qu is, in English, pronounced as by the Italians and Spaniards cw; as quad, quench; except quon, which is

If lully love should go in quest of beauty, Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? Shakespeare.

QUEST. n. f. [queste, French.]

QUE

Pair silver-bosom'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant,
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Mil.
An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as I deem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.

One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep, and the void immense
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be Milton.
'T would be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some to earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practices these bodied virtues. Addison.
We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spectator.

2. [for inquest.] An empannell'd jury.
What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the trowning judge? Shakespeare.

3. Searchers. Collectively.
You have been hotly call'd for,
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent above three several quests
To search you out. Shakespeare.

4. Inquiry; examination.
O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are sturk upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests Upon thy doings. Shakespeare.

5. Request; desire; solicitation.
Gad not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untraced hope or passion. Herbert.

To QUEST, v. n. [querer, Fr. from the quest.] To go to search.

QUESTANT, n. f. [from quester, French.]
Seeker; endeavourer after.

See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant thinks, find what you seek,
That same may cry you loud. Shakespeare.

QUESTION, n. f. [question, Fr. questio,
Latin.]

1. Interrogatory; any thing inquired.
Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.

2. Inquiry; disquisition.
It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for children princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon.

3. A dispute; a subject of debate.
There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. John.

4. Affair to be examined.
In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.
How easy is it for a man to fill a book with quotations, as you have done, that can be content with any thing, however foreign to the question? Waterland.

5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.
This is not my writing.
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakespeare.
'Tis time for him to show himself, when his very being is call'd in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.

The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against their moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.

Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.

6. Judicial trial.

QUE

Whoever be found guilty, the ~~communion~~ book hath deferred least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker.

7. Examination by torture.
Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack in question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe.

8. State of being the subject of present inquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, then reply is childish and unorderly in say, that we demand the thing in question, and show the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.

Not are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Atterbury.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.
As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.

To QUESTION, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To inquire.
Suddenly out of this delightful dream
The man awoke, and would have question'd more;
But he would not endure the woul theme. Spenser.

He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh. Bacon.
Unreasonable subtilty will still seem to be reasoning; and at least will question, when it cannot answer. Holaday.

2. To debate by interrogatories.
I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with a wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakespeare.

To QUESTION, v. a. [questionner, Fr.]

1. To examine one by questions.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case
your's;

Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much prophand;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r to silencing your son Shakespeare.

But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me,
Whither I go. Shakespeare.

This construction is not so unadvisably to be received as not at all to be question'd. Brown.

2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.
O impotent estate of human life!
Where fleeing joy does lasting doubt inspire,
And most we question what we most desire. Prior.

3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.

Be a design never to artificially laid, if it chances to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence question'd, and his person despised. South.

QUESTIONABLE, adj. [from question.]

1. Doubtful; disputable.
Your accustomed clemency will take in good worth the offer of these my simple labours, bestow'd for the necessary justification of laws heretofore made questionable, because not perfectly understood. Hooker.

That persons drowned float the ninth day when their soul breaketh, is a questionable determination, both in the time and cause. Brown.

It is questionable, whether the use of steel springs was known in those ancient times. Wibing's Math.

It is questionable, whether Galen ever saw the dissection of a human body. Baker.

2. Suspicious; liable to suspicion; liable to question.

Be thy advent wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee. Shakespeare.

QUI

QUESTIONARY, adj. [from question.] Inquiring; asking questions.

I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes or no to questions epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

QUESTIONABLENESS, n. f. [from question.] The quality of being questionable.

QUESTIONER, n. f. [from question.] An inquirer.

QUESTIONLESS, adv. [from question.]
Certainly; without doubt; doubtless.

Questionless hence it comes that many were mistaken. Halegh.

Questionless duty moves not so much upon command as promise; now that which propels the greatest and most suitable rewards to obedience, and the greatest punishments to disobedience, doubtless is the most likely to enforce the one and prevent the other. South.

QUESTMAN, } n. f. [quest, man, and QUESTMONGER, } monger.] Starter of lawsuits or prosecutions.

Their principle working was upon penal law, wherein they spared none, great nor small, but

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Lat.]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water; it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others. The specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest; the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely; in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool; but the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders. Hill.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in labe of branslone and quicksilver burnt. Peacocks.

Pleasures are few; and fewer we enjoy; Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy; We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill, Still it eludes us, and it glitters still.
